GULDAHL WINNER OF OPEN GOLF LAURELS WITH SCORE OF 284

New Jersey Pro Shoots Sensational Rounds Under Pressure to Retain United States Championship at Denver—Dick Metz Finishes in Second Place With Card of 290

DENVER, June 11 (AP).—Ralph Guldahl, burly Texas-born professional from the Braidburn Club of Madison, N.J., today won the American open golf championship for the second straight year with a smashing last-round comeback. He spread-eagled the field with a final 69, two under Cherry Hills' par for a seventy-two-hole total of 284, to become the first repeater since Bobby Jones did it in 1930.

Guldahl, trailing handsome Dick Metz, of Chicago, by four full strokes at the close of the third round this morning, came from behind with an electrifying finish to prove himself every inch a champion.

His victorious total, comprising successive rounds of 74, 70, 71 and 69, was three strokes short of the world record he set for major open championships in capturing the title at Oakland Hills for the first time with 281, but he won today by a much more impressive margin—six strokes

HAD BIG LEAD

This was the biggest winning margin in seventeen years of United States open championship history or since 1921, when Long Jim Barnes finished nine strokes in front of Walter Hagen at the Columbia Club, Chevy Chase, Md.

Metz, who looked like the winner when he led Guldahl, 211 to 215 at the fifty-four-hole mark, participated in a general blow-up that blasted the chances of all but the

LAY FOR HOURS UNDER TRACTOR

One Man Killed, Another Badly Crushed When Machine Overturns

VANCOUVER, June 11 (AP).—Hospital authorities here tonight said they held little hope for the recovery of George Richardson, twenty-three, critically injured by a runaway tractor, which fatally injured a fellow worker at a Howe Sound logging operation, Friday.

Charles Lindstrom driving the tractor at Hillside, B.C., forty miles north of here, was killed when the machine overturned.

Richardson, riding with him, lay beneath the overturned machine for two hours before he was discovered by Suy Yeh, a Chinese. He was brought to hospital here in a launch.

Hospital attaches said he was terribly crushed and his condition was "poor."

BABY WHO LOST EYE REPORTED IMPROVING

CHICAGO, June 11 (AP). — Baby Helaine Colan, whose left eye was removed a month ago on advice of council of ten medical specialists to halt the spread of glioma of the retina, was reported today to be showing definite signs of improvement.

X-ray treatments have been given to stop the cancerous growth which also attacked her right eye. Her maternal grandfather, Dr. Morris Harshman, said Helaine's chances of life and partial sight were "very, very promising."

CO-OPERATION NEEDED

BAIE COMEAU, Que., June 11 (CP). —Co-operation between church and state, Catholic and Protestant, and capital and labor must be the watchwords of civilization, Premier Maurice Duplessis said today at official opening of the Ontario Paper Company's $30,000,000 paper mill plant development at this new city on the north shore of the lower St. Lawrence River.

ROAD PLANS ARE STUDIED

Announcement of Modified B.C. Highway Programme Expected This Week

With almost half of the year gone and no complete answers yet on its most outstanding questions, the Provincial Government worked silently yesterday on plans for an anticipated announcement of a highway programme to be made public this week.

Circles close to the ministry predicted a limited programme of road construction and improvement out of the Province's own funds, with $1,000,000 suggested as the outside limit of such expenditure this year. Cabinet circles declined to comment on any phase of the plan.

Meanwhile, it was recalled, the Province has referred on more than one occasion to an unexpended balance from the $3,000,000 public works loan of the previous year, only part of which was expended in the special highway programme of that year.

SUMS DATED

The ordinary road maintenance vote of $2,179,570, as extended in the Legislature, was available for roads, bridges and ferries in the current fiscal year ending March 31, 1939, but must cover maintenance rather than new construction work.

Pressing the Government on one side were numerous requests for specific road construction, and on the other, the ominous fact that revenues accruing from record industrial production last year may not be repeated at quite the same level in the months to come. A modified road programme will probably be the final decision taken.

ABANDON ATTACK ON HIGHEST PEAK

British Everest Expedition Fights Losing Battle Against Hostility Of the Elements

DARJELLING, India, June 11 (AP). —Mount Everest's eternal snows remained inviolate today, as bitter weather forced a British expedition to abandon an assault on the world's highest peak.

Word reached here that the party headed by H. W. Tilman had turned back after battling rains, furious gales, snow avalanches and bitter cold.

It was the seventh successive expedition within recent years to attempt unsuccessfully to scale the unconquered peak, 29,141 feet above sea level.

Japan Launches General Attack on Hankow With Warship and Land Force

Forty Gunboats and Transports Nearing Provisional Capital of Chiang Kai-Shek's Government—Japanese Columns Fighting Way Through Honan—Stern Resistance

Stubborn Defenders Still Holding at Chengchow

SHANGHAI, June 12 (AP).—Japan launched today what she announced was a "general attack" upon Hankow, a provisional seat of General Chiang Kai-Shek's Chinese Government, in the heart of China, 585 miles up the Yangtze River.

The Japanese navy served notice here of plans to use both warships and land forces in a synchronized assault upon the capital, Central China's greatest commercial city, having a normal population of more than 1,500,000.

FAR UP RIVER

About forty Japanese gunboats and transports were reported already to be within 250 miles of Hankow, far up the river, and already in action. The stream is navigable for ocean-going vessels even past Hankow.

Japanese columns in the overland drive now are fighting westward through Honan Province, and another column is approaching Nanking, 215 miles downstream from Hankow.

A second main theatre of war had its stage at Chengchow, about 300 miles north of Hankow on the Pei-

Buildings Razed, Homes Damaged By Texas Storm

STANTON, Tex., June 11 (AP). —A violent wind and rain storm caused damage estimated at $20,000 here tonight. A half-dozen structures were demolished and twelve homes damaged by a twister which accompanied a three-inch rain. Communication lines were down, but no loss of life was reported.

No Plans to Stop Bombing British Ships

LONDON, June 11. — Indications grew here tonight that the British Government was not planning any decisive step to halt the almost daily series of Spanish insurgent raids on British ships carrying food and other supplies to Spanish Government ports.

Politicians and newspapers sympathetic toward insurgent Generalissimo Francisco Franco repeatedly have pointed out ships have been warned they go to Spain at their own risk.

Places Big Order For Speed Planes

LONDON, June 11 (CP). — The Air Ministry will place an order for 200 speedy training-type airplanes with the Philip & Powis Aircraft Company in the near future, it was reported here last night.

The order for the planes, to be delivered this year and in 1939, would be the largest placed with a single firm since the vast air rearmament programme was launched.

NAZI ADVISERS LEAVING CHINA

Berlin Asks Release of Von Falkenhausen and Members of Mission

HANKOW, June 11 (AP).—China, at the end of the month, will lose the services of German advisers, headed by Gen. Alexander von Falkenhausen, who aided Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek in whipping together his national army.

After nearly three weeks of uncertainty since Berlin asked for the release of the men under contract as military advisers and instructors, German authorities said today Von Falkenhausen and all of the regular members of his mission would leave en route to Germany, by July 1.

Their departure will deal a heavy blow to China's hopes of resisting the Japanese invasion, as Chiang has turned more and more to Von Falkenhausen for advice.

BOY TUMBLED TO DEATH ON ROCKS

ALPINE, Texas, June 11 (AP). — Youthful Mr. and Mrs. Francis Black, San Antonio couple, who two months ago took tousled, thirteen-year-old Marvin Dale Nobbitt from his widowed mother to "give him a good home," today were accused of tumbling him off a 400-foot mountain precipice in a ghastly insurance death plot.

Murder charges were filed against the couple by District Attorney Alan Fraser, after an all-night sifting of circumstances surrounding the drop of the lad into a rock-filled canyon Thursday. Fraser said "the boy's death was not accidental."

PLAN HAVEN FOR JEWS

SAN FRANCISCO, June 11 (AP).—Plans for a co-operative project to establish a California haven for Jews driven from Austria by the Hitler regime were outlined before an anti-Nazi mass meeting here yesterday. Speakers proposed the pooling of $1,000,000 to help re-establish 800 Austrian refugee families.

BAKERS' STRIKE COMES TO END

Seattle's Acute Four-Day Bread Shortage Relieved By Settlement

SEATTLE, June 11 (AP).—Breadless days in Seattle, reminiscent of Great War wheatless days, ended tonight when bakery operators and union crafts in the industry announced settlement of a four-day strike.

J. B. Fowler, secretary of the Bakers of Washington, said an agreement with all crafts in the industry had been signed. Bakers will report to work for their regular shifts at once, Fowler said.

The settlement ended an acute bread shortage. Nearly all grocery stores were "out." Restaurants dependent on bakeries were rationing their scant remaining supplies when the settlement was announced.

Fowler said restaurants could obtain bakery supplies by calling at bakeries Sunday. Regular deliveries to restaurants and grocery outlets will be resumed Monday.

Details of the settlement were not disclosed.

LICENCES ARE GRANTED

TOKIO, June 11 (CP-Havas). — Soviet authorities today agreed to grant visas to 10,000 Japanese fishermen who wish to go to Soviet waters off Kamchatka, bringing an amicable end to a Russo-Japanese dispute which had threatened to take an acute turn.

Five Die as Pleasure Plane Nose Dives to Earth Near Airfield

Accident at Worland, Wyoming, Attributed to Motor Failure—Four Men and One Woman in Machine on Intended Short Flight

WORLAND, Wyo., June 11 (AP).—Four men and a woman were killed today when a plane piloted by William O. Bashaw, thirty-four, Seattle, crashed on a root cellar of a farm near Worland, in North Central Wyoming.

The dead, in addition to Bashaw, were:

W. B. Bledsoe, Valley Falls, Kan.

Sheriff John Nicola said reports from witnesses indicated the plane's motor failed and caused it to go into a nose-dive and crash onto the cellar on the farm of Charles Cavanaugh at the edge of Worland about 4 p.m.

"The plane after taking off from the airport here circled over the town, and as it passed over the post-office the motor sputtered and the ship went into its spin," the sheriff said.

THREE EUROPEAN CAPITALS ARE SHAKEN BY SHARP EARTHQUAKE

First Ten-Minute Shock Felt in London—Three Killed in Belgium and Some Score Injured—Germany, the Netherlands and France Also Shaken by Earth Tremors

Minor but Extensive Damage Most Serious in Belgium

LONDON, June 11 (AP).—An earthquake born in the North Sea jolted five nations today, rumbling over a 400-mile front from England to the Rhineland, and killing at least three persons.

There was scattered damage, surprise, alarm and even panic among the countryfolk in Belgium and Northern France, who dropped to their knees in prayer as chimneys toppled, walls cracked, windows broke and furniture jumped.

Three capitals—London, Paris and Brussels—felt the shocks which some seismographs recorded as having a duration of ten minutes. London felt the first shock at 11:59 a.m. (2:59 a.m., P.S.T.); Brussels a severe tremor at 11:57.

THREE KILLED

Three persons were killed and about twenty injured in Belgium. In Brussels a frightened man leaped to his death from a balcony; in Ghent an out-of-control street car killed a pedestrian; a crumbling wall killed a bricklayer at Cruyshautem.

Two children were injured seriously at Hazebrouck, Northern France, and in several continental towns there were injuries from falling bricks.

Damage was minor but extensive, apparently most serious in Belgium.

It was estimated damage there might reach $100,000. The frontal wall of the Palace of Justice at Ghent split and a wall of the Liege Citadel Barracks shifted four feet. Heavy factory motors were moved in some places.

Foreign Secretary Will Accompany King to France

PARIS, June 11 (AP).—The Government announced today that Great Britain's Foreign Secretary, Viscount Halifax, will accompany King George and Queen Elizabeth on their state visit to France, June 28, lending weight to reports that France and Great Britain would take steps at that time to strengthen their entente.

Trapped in Submerged Engine Cab

ST. LOUIS, June 11 (AP).—The body of Engineer W. W. Malloy still was trapped tonight in the submerged cab of his locomotive, which overturned in flooded Jouchim Creek early today on a washed-out section of Missouri Pacific track.

Thirty-five passengers, marooned in the wrecked train by high water reaching almost to the car floors, were taken off after eight hours of anxious waiting. None was injured.

BERLIN PRESS EXCITED AGAIN

Climax in Explosive Issue With Czechoslovakia May Come Within Week

BERLIN, June 11. — Newspapers here referred today to Hitler's determination to protect Germans outside Germany even as they did nearly three months ago when Austria was seized.

The climax in the explosive issue between Czechoslovakia and her autonomy-demanding minority of 3,500,000 Sudeten Germans may come within a week.

A Sudeten German party communique, warning that future developments depended upon the measure to which the Government met the minority's demands, declared Government's draft of the proposed nationalities statute was expected to be received next week, "probably Tuesday."

STRICTLY MUNICIPAL

Tomorrow's election is strictly municipal but, with the votes on May 22 and May 29, is expected to give an index to the strength of the Sudeten Germans led by Konrad Henlein.

Among the blasts in the German press was the declaration of The Boersen Zeitung, which said every blow in the face of a Sudeten German "is also a blow in the face of the 75,000,000 Germans in the Reich of Adolf Hitler. It is a blow in the face of a great, proud nation."

In Praha, an appeal signed by approximately 100 Czech and Slovak organizations was issued for voluntary contributions to a $35,000,000 defence fund.

WOULD SHAME PLANE MAKER

Condemnation of Civilian Bombings Directed at U.S. Manufacturer

WASHINGTON, June 11 (AP).—United States Secretary of State Hull undertook today to halt the sale of American-made bombing planes to Japan.

He chose public opinion as the means of accomplishing this objective.

In carefully-worded phrases, Hull told reporters this Government's repeated condemnation of the bombing of civilian populations was directed especially at the manufacturers of military planes, and the general American public as well as foreign powers.

DISCOURAGE SALES

The repeated condemnation of ruthless warfare would discourage sales to regions where planes were being used to bomb civilians, he predicted. Other such condemnations would be voiced in the future, he said.

Though Mr. Hull named no nation specifically it was obvious that Japan would be chiefly affected if his policy were successful. Shipments of war material to both sides in Spain have been banned already by invocation of the Neutrality Act.

The neutrality law has not been invoked against sales of planes or bombs to Japan or China, however.

It was reported reliably that some manufacturers already have shown a willingness to reject contracts for the shipment of bombing planes to regions the secretary has in mind.

Outer Line Of Defences Penetrated

HENDAYE, France (at the Spanish Frontier), June 11 (AP).—Spanish insurgents reported tonight they had advanced to within three miles of Castellon de la Plana, key objective in their drive on Valencia.

The advance was said to have come after insurgents cracked Valencia's main outer defences by occupying Albocacer fortified town twenty-seven miles north of Castellon and sixty-seven miles from Valencia.

EDEN ATTACKS BRITISH STAND

Former Foreign Secretary Rebukes Government for Its Failure to Act

Speaking at Leamington, the former foreign secretary called on Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain for a "clear stand" against Nazi-Fascist power politics.

His attack, the most forceful since he quit the Cabinet February 20 in protest against Chamberlain's "realistic" foreign policy, came as Czechoslovakia and warring Spain held Europe's attention as danger spots.

STATES TWO POINTS

With Britain seeking to stave off the threat of a new 1914 in German-Czechoslovak differences and seeking to cope with Spanish insurgent air raids on British merchantmen, Eden drove home these points:

1. "Retreat is not always the to peace."

2. "True friendship" with other nations cannot be built on foundations like "disregard of engagements, merciless bombings of open towns and deliberate sinking of British merchant ships."

This was taken as a thinly-veiled slap at Chamberlain's efforts for an understanding with Germany and Italy at a time when many think German and Italian planes are the backbone of the Spanish air raid campaign and Adolf Hitler is determined to cow Czechoslovakia into submission.

Costing Thousands To Fight Fire in Forests of Island

Forestry Inspector Reports No Settlements Are Now in Danger—Large Crews Still Employed In Fight to Check Spread of Flames

VANCOUVER, June 11 (CP).—Inspector James Macdonald, of the British Columbia Forestry Branch, said today it was costing $1,300 daily for wages alone to fight a 4,000-acre forest fire near Bowser, B.C., fifty miles north of Nanaimo on Vancouver Island.

Inspector MacDonald returned here last night from Bowser, where the blaze has raged over logging slash on Thompson & Clark operations for nearly a week.

He said the logging company had 150 men fighting the fire and the Forestry Department had ninety or more building a fire line on the southern boundary of the fire just north of Big Qualicum River.

Company employees were holding the fire along Rosewall Creek, south of their camp, while a department crew was putting a fire line through from Cook Creek to the southwest behind Bowser.

Inspector MacDonald said no settlements were now in danger.

Forty-six new fires have started in Vancouver forestry district in the past week, bringing the total for the season to 114, compared with seventy-five during the same period last year.

EIGHT-MILE FRONT

ISLAND SAWMILL PREY TO FLAMES

Quick Work by Employees and Forestry Men Limits Spread Of Fire

NANAIMO, June 11 (CP). — The Olympic Logging Company's sawmill and a quantity of lumber was destroyed by fire late today. Damage was estimated at $50,000.

Located on Horne Lake Road between the main highway and Horne Lake the sawmill was razed by the fast spreading flames and only quick work by employees and forestry men kept the fire from adjoining timber.

E. Cowie, of the Nanaimo Forestry Branch, sent a pump and 1,000 feet of firehose to the scene when notified of the blaze, and his quick response was credited with stopping the fire from spreading to valuable timber and turning into a possible major conflagration.

YOUNG LADIES TO REPRESENT CITY IN SOUTH

Miss Victoria Contest Winners Will Have Trip to San Francisco

CARNIVAL TO BE STAGED THURSDAY

With a trip to the World's Fair at San Francisco next year as the grand prize for the winner of the Miss Victoria contest, six young ladies will compete this month and next for the coveted title. Miss Victoria will be accompanied on her trip by two attendants. First prize, to be awarded at the conclusion of the contest, will be $150, with $100 to second place winner and $75 to the third girl.

The Miss Victoria contest is sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce and the proceeds will be used for the August parades, entries for which are already being received from outside points. Financial assistance for these undertakings last year was realized from the seventy-fifth anniversary celebrations committee, but will be lacking this season.

"JOY DATE FOR '38"

"Joy Date for Thirty-Eight" is the slogan adopted by this body of energetic young businessmen, and the various attractions, in addition to providing entertainment for Victoria citizens, are expected to draw many tourists to this city.

Through the courtesy of Robin Raymond, manager of the Crystal Garden, the entire building will be turned over to the Junior Chamber for a big, free carnival night on Thursday, at which the six contestants will be introduced with their managers. The public is cordially invited to this affair to enjoy the dancing and many games that will be offered.

A large public demonstration will climax the Miss Victoria contest, which will open on Thursday and continue until Saturday, July 23, when the winner will be announced. Votes will be sold at ten cents each, and will be in books of ten.

Miss Victoria and her attendants will make their appearance in San Francisco on July 1, 1939, the date set aside by the fair committee as British Columbia Day.

Competing for the title are Kay White, sponsored by the United Commercial Travelers and managed by Warren W. Martin; Jean Wilson, sponsored by the Macdonald Electric, Ltd., and managed by George E. Macdonald; Phyllis Addison, sponsored by the Blue Line Transportation Co. and managed by Miss G. Townsend; Doreen McGregor, sponsored by the Beaux-Arts and managed by Cedric Lefevre; Eleanor Moffat, sponsored by the Scottish Societies and managed by Ed Whyte; and Jean Bishop, sponsored by the Public Services and managed by Thomas G. Harris.

Miss White, who has the distinction of being the only brunette in the contest, was born and educated in Victoria. She is the superviser of the Hudson's Bay Company Coffee Shop. Miss Wilson was also born and educated in the city and is a soloist in the First United Church. She has taken part in various forms of athletics and is employed in the licence bureau of the Provincial Government.

Miss Addison, another local girl, is an instructress at the Russian Ballet School and was active in school athletics. Miss McGregor was born and educated in Victoria. Miss Moffat, who is employed in the Provincial Government Buildings, is a native daughter of Scottish descent. Miss Bishop completes the sextette of Victoria girls vying for the title.

LIVING HEARTS ON PHOTOGRAPH

Specialists Learn New Process for Taking Picture Of Human Organism

SAN FRANCISCO, June 11 (AP).—Specialists learned today for the first time how to photograph the living human heart in all its major details, so that hereafter they may see exactly what is wrong and what should be treated in cardiac cases.

The process consists of injecting in the veins a substance which causes the blood stream to become visible in X-ray pictures. Each section of the heart and the veins and arteries about it stand out noticeably in the photographs.

It was announced before the American Heart Association by its originators, Dr. George P. Robb and Dr. Israel Steinberg, of Bellevue Hospital and New York University, New York City.

COMPLETE PICTURE

Heretofore the heart has appeared as a sort of white blotch, with little or no detail, in X-ray films. Under the new process its size, shape, position, its four compartments, its valves and even the thickness of its walls are revealed.

In the past the inside of the living heart has been beyond the sight of surgeons, Robb and Steinberg said, and medical knowledge of its workings came largely from dead tissue—organs extracted after death.

The injected substance causes the blood to become almost opaque to X-rays. Sponsors of the heart photographing system said it passed quickly from the life stream and left no deleterious effects.

MEMBERS OF BOARD ON GOOD-WILL TOUR

VANCOUVER, June 11 (CP).—Forty-six members of Vancouver Board of Trade today were Alberta-bound on their twentieth annual "good-will" tour. They left here on Thursday night by train.

The party will visit Alberta and British Columbia centres on their eight-day trip. Stops will be made at Revelstoke, Golden, Banff, Calgary, Edmonton and Jasper.

BUDGET TALK SPECULATIVE

Delay in Decision on New Trade Agreements Alters General Situation

Special to The Colonist

OTTAWA, June 11.—The budget to be brought down in Parliament Thursday by Finance Minister Charles Dunning will be unique by reason of being limited largely to a statement of the country's financial status.

The whole situation has been caused by an impasse in the triangular trade negotiations at Washington between Canada, Great Britain and United States. Delivery of the budget has been held off in the hope a new Canada-United States trade pact would be ready this session for ratification. There is no longer any such expectation.

In the highest authoritative sources it is admitted prospects have been obliterated of a new trade pact being reached with United States before the end of the month when the session is to be terminated under tentative arrangements between the major political parties.

Tariff changes will be inconsequential. Although an agitation has been carried on among Liberal free traders from the Prairies for lowering of duties on farm implements entering from the United States, there is considerable conjecture if this move will be put into effect for the reason that such a proposal is an instrument for bargaining purposes in the trade discussions.

MAY REDUCE TAX

Reports are in circulation the Government may reduce the sales tax from the prevailing rate of 8 per cent, which in the last fiscal year yielded $135,000,000. This is very doubtful if Mr. Dunning carries out his intimation for a "balanced" budget.

Legislation this session to expand the Government's home building scheme and to provide loans to municipalities for self-liquidating works will increase the drag on the National Treasury. These tax reductions, therefore, could not be made unless the intimation of provision being made to balance the budget was for election consumption only.

Canadian tariff experts are back from two months in Washington, but will return in about ten days. In close official quarters, it is openly stated one difficulty after another has pursued trade discussions. On highest authority, it is learned definitely that Australia, New Zealand and South Africa have been extremely reluctant to give up the preferences they enjoy in the markets of the Mother Canada and Canada.

HOLD DISCUSSIONS

Futhermore, the British delegation is pressing for postponement of further discussions until early in the Fall, so that they may return to England and consult further with the United Kingdom Government.

The intimation from highly authentic sources rather precludes the possibility of a new trade agreement with the United States being completed late in July as suggested by Washington.

Government spokesmen tonight forecast Great Britain was likely to spend approximately $60,000,000 in Canada within the next few years for aircraft alone, and long-range contracts probably will be let to Dominion concerns this Summer.

"If Great Britain carries out an expenditure of $20,000,000 for aircraft construction in the United States as intimated, at least $60,000,000 will be expended in Canada for building of planes of different types," spokesmen said.

"NERVES" SHE CALLED IT

Losing interest—losing friends—she never went out any more—always too tired. "Nerves," she thought — but it was her kidneys, the filters of her blood, that needed attention. Delay meant danger. She took Dodd's Kidney Pills at once. The improved action of her kidneys helped to clear away blood impurities and excess acids. Fatigue, headache, backache, lack of energy, disappeared. 117

HOTEL UNIONS PREDICT FIGHT

Portland Works Say They Are Determined to Strike to End

PORTLAND, June 11 (AP).—A "finish fight" was promised today by union leaders in a strike against eleven Portland hotels while operators assured the traveling public they were running "normally" and accused the unions of confusing the issue.

At a mass meeting, several hundred unionists applauded their leaders' declaration that they were in the strike to the end.

Although the joint board of five restaurant and hotel unions involved said no other hotels had been added to the picketed list, it reiterated its intention of broadening the boycott through the co-operation of other unions.

ON PICKET LINES

Laundry drivers, teamsters, carpenters, painters and other union workers have been instructed not to cross picket lines. The union board said it was considering calling upon warehousemen to stop the movement of supplies if that were deemed necessary. The union heads said they were getting 100 per cent co-operation.

Meantime the operators in a statement attacked the effectiveness of the strike, which began Wednesday in a dispute over the right of the various unions to represent hotel employees.

HOTELS OPERATING

The statement asserted that the management of one hotel served, without confusion, 5,200 people at three meals Friday, using "new crews" of non-union sentiment. The operators said that in spite of the attempted boycott through other unions, "deliveries of all supplies are being made and workers are going through picket lines."

The operators said they regarded it as important that the traveling public realize that the hotels could continue to give them "normal service."

The statement also charged that the unions were "confusing the issue" by making it appear that the dispute concerned wages, hours and a closed shop.

AUTHORS' ASSOCIATION

The regular meeting of the Victoria and Islands Branch of the Canadian Authors' Association will be held at the home of Mrs. W. R. Steer, 1960 Argyle Street, on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. A programme will be presented by members of the drama, poetry and short story study groups. Refreshments will be served.

BUYING ORDERS FLOOD MARKETS

Prices Rise Quickly in Chicago Wheat Pit on Crop Estimates

CHICAGO, June 11 (AP).—The excited Chicago wheat pit was flooded today with buying orders that skyrocketed prices almost 5 cents a bushel back to 80 cents, the highest in five weeks. Trading rules prohibit a jump or decline of more than 5 cents in one session.

Claiming by its sharpest spurt of the year the attention of farmers, grain dealers and shippers throughout the world, the sensitive market, mirrored highly important trade developments, especially in the domestic grain belt affecting the value of the principal bread grain.

Combines lumbering through golden fields of the Southwest in the past few days have brought to light evidence of startling crop damage done a month or two ago by frost and cold weather. Ravages of rust also have been bared on examinations of kernels flowing through the harvesting machinery, excessive rainfall has slowed the harvest and lodged wheat.

WINTER YIELDS

Widespread reports of these perils, partly confirmed by experts swarming into the belt to make new appraisals of the crop which promised to be the largest in the nation's history, indicated decidedly less optimistic prospects for a bumper Winter wheat yield.

This development, coupled with the fact that domestic prices have risen about 12 cents a bushel from the five-year low level of ten days ago, brought into play still another important bullish factor. Frightened by the crop reports and by the higher prices, European importing nations bought more American wheat than they have purchased in weeks. Export sales were estimated at almost 1,000,000 bushels, mostly old and new hard Winter wheat, and a little Canadian grain.

The Government's forecast of a record American wheat crop of more than 1,000,000,000 bushels was followed today by an order from President Roosevelt for a Federal survey of world wheat supply conditions.

vention officers of the Province doubling crews at the scene. Reports received at headquarters of the service here during the day said the fire was being held with difficulty, though not yet fully under control. Rain, expected on Vancouver Island by meteorological services, promised some relief.

Elsewhere about the province, warm, dry weather continued to make trouble for fire prevention crews. On the Lower Mainland foresters hesitated to call a "fire day," and to set in motion special precautions which go with a general fire warning.

Meanwhile the public was asked to take due care with picnic fires in the bush over the week-end, as a conjunction of fire hazards was reported rolling up at most points throughout the province.

SOCIAL CREDIT MEETING

"Public Enemies Nos. 1 and 2" will be the subject of an address by Rev. C. P. Bradley, of Australia, at a meeting of the Social Credit Society in the board room, No. 214, Pemberton Building, on Tuesday, at 8 p.m. Mr. Bradley recently completed a six-month lecture tour of New Zealand.

NO PATRONAGE SAYS PEARSON

Employment Service Carried On Without Party Influence, Minister States

There is no patronage in administration of the employment service in British Columbia, Hon. G. S. Pearson declared yesterday, in comment on discussion in the House of Commons, Ottawa, on the issue of jobs and party politics. The Provincial Minister of Labor issued a statement, in which he said:

"I have been in touch today with the superintendent of the Employment Service and head of the office in Victoria, and they both say that never in their time has there been any evidence whatever of political interference with the service. These officials have been in the service almost since it started.

HIS ORDERS

"The service has instructions from me that it must accept no orders from anyone as to what men shall be given access to employment. The officials are absolutely free to send out men as they think will fit the available jobs best," Mr. Pearson stated.

British Columbia recently signed its annual agreement with the Dominion, carrying on the employment service jointly, with the final disposition under either Federal or Provincial authority not yet decided.

OTTAWA, June 11 (C.P.).—Total ordinary revenue of the Dominion Government soared to $113,897,126 in May, an increase of $14,296,554 over May, 1937, when it was $99,600,572, the comptroller of the Treasury reported today. Special receipts brought the total to $113,992,954, against $99,972,292. Total ordinary expenditures of the Government was $38,729,844, compared with $37,585,759 in May, 1937.

WAR MEMORIES ARE RECALLED

Henry Jarvis Chosen President of Seventh Battalion Association

Memories of the days when the "Fighting Seventh" made its name on the battlefields of France were revived last night when the Seventh Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, held its annual reunion dinner in Spencer's dining-room. Nearly sixty members of the association formed from the remnants of the battalion attended the gathering, over which Leslie G. Scott, retiring president, presided.

Colonel Bygg Hall headed a contingent of seven members of the Vancouver association of the Seventh Battalion, to whom a cordial welcome was extended by Mr. Scott.

Henry Jarvis was elected president of the association for the 1938-39 term, and Captain William Merston was chosen vice-president. D. G. Holmes being unanimously re-elected secretary-treasurer.

BATTALION TOAST

The toast to the battalion was proposed by Colonel Hall, who recalled memories of the days when it was known as the First British Columbia Battalion, and declared that the Seventh was the happiest family with which he had ever been associated.

Responding to the toast, Mr. Dempster expressed the hope that the annual reunion of the Victoria association would continue to be observed.

Greetings from the Vancouver association of the Seventh Battalion veterans were brought by J. P. Salmon, vice-president of the Vancouver body, in responding to the toast to the visitors, proposed by Mr. Jarvis.

Community singing, with Cecil Heaton at the piano, was a feature of the evening, and the entertainment programme comprised songs and stories by members of the Vancouver and Victoria associations.

CANADIAN HONORED

BOARD GIVES APPROVAL OF WAGES BILL

U.S. House Committee Accepts Compromise Measure for Industry

PAY DIFFERENTIALS ARE PROVIDED FOR

WASHINGTON, June 11 (AP).—A thoroughly compromised wage-hour bill, including a provision for pay differentials within a given industry, received unanimous approval of a United States joint Congressional committee today.

Chairman Thomas (Dem., Utah) announced the conferees would draft a formal report on the bill at a meeting tomorrow, so that it could be taken up in the House Monday. Advocates of the measure predicted it would be approved there quickly and sent to the Senate for final passage early in the week.

FILIBUSTER THREAT

The threat of a filibuster against the measure by Southern Senators, who have been fighting for a geographical wage differential, appeared eliminated tonight by the compromise draft.

There were hints that the American Federation of Labor might not be agreeable to the wage section, and might provoke a fight on it. Later, Committee Chairman Thomas predicted, however, quick acceptance of the bill by both Houses.

The wage controversy in the committee was settled by an agreement on the following formula:

BOARDS OF INDUSTRY

Thereafter an independent administrator in the Labor Department would appoint boards for each inter-state industry. These boards would be charged with increasing the minimum wage to 40 cents an hour as rapidly as possible.

The boards would classify each industry and fix minima for each classification. Once their orders were approved by the administrator they would stand until he reconvened the board to reinvestigate conditions in the industry.

At the end of seven years' operation of the law, all existing wage orders would be wiped out automatically, and a minimum scale of 40 cents an hour would go into effect.

BURDEN OF PROOF

This would shift the "burden of proof" on the industries. To obtain exemptions they would have to show that they could not pay their employees 40 cents an hour without curtailing seriously the opportunities for employment.

The hour maximum for the first year of the law would be a forty-four-hour week. Most inter-state industries working their employees longer than that would be forced to pay them time and a half for overtime. The following year the maximum work week would decline to forty-two hours. The goal of forty hours would be reached the third year.

Exemptions to cover collective bargaining contracts where the hours might be longer but the pay much higher than the minimum, were drafted into the bill.

HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION

A meeting of the British Columbia Historical Association will be held on Tuesday in the Provincial Library at 8.15 p.m. Mrs. W. Curtis Sampson will give a lecture on "Joseph Despard Pemberton, First Surveyor-General of British Columbia." It will be followed by lantern slides of views of early Victoria and pictures of friends and acquaintances of Mr. Pemberton, shown by Mrs. Arthur H. Creer, honorary secretary of the society.

EIGHT HOUSES WILL BE BUILT

Saanich Leads in Home-Building Projects for Week In Municipalities

Sixteen permits were issued in Saanich last week for a total value of $29,125, and that district led the building in the three suburban municipalities. Seven permits were taken out for dwellings of four rooms more and the remainder for smaller buildings and repairs.

Mrs. R. Hallas applied for the only permit issued from the Oak Bay Municipal Hall for a four-roomed house at 2024 Meadow Place valued at $1,900.

In Saanich, J. G. Thomson will build a $2,500 six-roomed home on Mount Newton Road. A house of four rooms costing $1,100 will be erected for Gilbert Anderson on Donald Street. J. Henson, Jr., has taken out two permits for five-roomed dwellings on Earl Grey Street, each valued at $2,100. On Miramontes Drive, G. C. Harris will construct a $5,500 home having six rooms. Another six-roomed house on Gorge Road and Donald Street is being built by the Saanich Construction Company and it is estimated to cost $2,500. Harvey Lutz has taken out a permit for $1,500 for a house of four rooms which will be erected for him on Reynolds Road.

FIVE DIE AS PLANE CRASHES TO EARTH

When it went out of control Bashaw apparently cut off the switch to the motor, Sheriff Nicola said. The plane did not catch fire after it crashed.

Bashaw, former Seattle automobile dealer, who left Seattle last month on a flight to Chicago, arrived here Thursday with Miss Brattus.

FLIGHT PASSENGERS

Paris, an orchestra leader and pilot, was the son of H. B. Paris, former mayor of Worland, and Bard, whose mother, Mrs. Mildred Bard, operates an art studio at Spokane, Wash., had been painting pictures here and at Greybull, Wyo. Little was known of Bledsoe, who was identified by slips of paper found in his clothing.

The plane, a four-place cabin monoplane, had taken off from the Worland airport shortly before the crash.

George Nagata and Bobby Kirkpatrick, playing with a baseball team near the Cavanaugh farm, were the first to reach the wrecked ship. They were followed by others who saw the ship fall.

DEAD ARE REMOVED

Paris was the first removed from the wreckage and Sheriff Nicola said it was believed he was still breathing. He died however, before he could be placed in a car to be taken to a hospital. The other four passengers were killed instantly. Bashaw's body was badly mangled.

Dr. L. S. Andrews, Washakie County coroner, said the bodies would be held here for relatives. He had not yet made plans tonight for an inquest.

Airport attendants said Bashaw and his companions planned only a short ride over the city.

George Evants, farming the Cavanaugh property, said the plane crashed through the dirt-covered roof of the cellar which was used to store vegetables.

SHEEP BREEDERS MEET

METCHOSIN, June 11.—The annual meeting of the Metchosin and District Sheep Breeders' Association was held in Metchosin Hall on Wednesday evening. The following were elected to office: President, F. G. Waide; vice-president, G. F. Weir; secretary, Mrs. E. J. T. Woodward; auditor, Fergus Reid; committee, J. B. Edwards, G. Ball, J. Rainey. After the general business, a discussion of collective marketing of lambs took place.

ENTERTAIN AT SMOKER

Members of the Showboat, who are leaving today for Northern waters on a three-month trip, provided entertainment at a smoking concert held in the Britannia Branch, Canadian Legion, clubrooms last evening. Taking part in the programme were Frank Merryfield, Bert White, Wilfred Adams, Tom Cartwright, Lawrence Eidlund, Emile Kinnon and Sam Howard.

PEACE, WITH HONOR

This Autumn Canada and the United States will mark a century and a quarter of unbroken peace. It will be an object lesson to the world that nations may live side by side in amity, agreeing where they may, disagreeing when they wish, but preserving always mutual regard, as among friends.

We on this side of the longest unfortified border in the world have learned to admire the initiative and bonhomie of our southern neighbors, and to understand in some part their problems. South of the border Canadians find themselves well received, and respected in turn for some of those qualities which go into the make-up of British character.

Differences, political and otherwise, there have been and will be; but here two nations have learned to settle their differences in an amicable and an intelligent way. They have learned to arbitrate. They have arbitrated the use of land, the navigation of water, and the growing use of that universal ocean, the air. The last commission that comes to mind was one to settle the unwitting export of smelter fumes. That is intelligent living.

When the time comes, and the 125th anniversary of peaceful occupation rolls around, it will be fittingly observed on both sides of the line. Back of the friendship, there is the sympathy which grows from understanding, and the patience to face growing pains which differ only in degree. Before the world of nations, Canada and the United States soon will point to the celebration of a century and a quarter of unbroken peace, with honor.

THE MIND OF ST. PAUL

Among the writings of F. E. Smith, first Earl of Birkenhead, a jurist who filled the high office of Lord Chancellor of England with great distinction, there is an essay of about forty-five hundred words upon "The Conversion of St. Paul," included in a volume entitled "Turning Points of History." With a boldness and directness which were characteristic of this brilliant lawyer and judge, he begins with these words: "Of all men who may claim to have changed the course of the world's history, St. Paul must surely take the first place. He altered the basic ideas of Western civilization: the whole of our history bears the marks of that busy career of impassioned teaching which the Jewish tentmaker undertook after his conversion to faith in Jesus Christ."

The pith and substance of Earl Birkenhead's opinions concerning the great Apostle cannot be set forth within the limits of a newspaper article without considerable loss, but a general idea may be given in condensed form. The writer begins with a sketch of Paul's lineage, his personal characteristics, and the nature of his education, and says that his education, and especially his relation to Jewish religion, Greek culture, and Roman civilization made him naturally the inspirer and promoter of Protestantism, much as Peter has remained the patron of Roman Catholicism. The effect upon Paul of what happened on the road to Damascus was that his whole mind altered its direction. After the first natural reluctance to accept him as a genuine convert, Paul's superiority over the other Apostles in respect of birth, education and rank was recognized and acknowledged. Peter might, and indeed did, entertain the general conception that "God is no respecter of persons, but in every nation he that feareth Him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him," but it was Paul who conceived the idea of actually carrying the Gospel to the Gentiles. In Birkenhead's opinion, if the new religion had been left to the other disciples, it might have remained a "purely Jewish concern, even an insignificant heresy, to be studied as a curiosity by rabbis and their pupils." It was due to Paul's ministry that Christianity "rose up and overpowered every other creed in the Roman Empire, and that today it is the religion of the whole Western world."

Paul's Roman citizenship was an important element in determining his career and the progress of his teaching. His appeal to Caesar enabled him to carry his message into "the city which was ever afterwards to be the centre of his religion." Birkenhead's account of the conversion of St. Paul as one of the great turning points of history ends in a passage too good to be compressed into a cold and colorless summary. He says: "It is enough that we see in him a man beside whose achievement even a colossus like Napoleon seems a pigmy, and Alexander the Great a creature of an instant. I cannot look out from the windows of my house without my eye resting on the dome of the Cathedral which Wren raised above the busy capital of an empire greater and more powerful than any which Paul could contemplate on this earth; the Cathedral bears the name of that earnest, clumsy, epileptic tentmaker of Tarsus—that Roman citizen who, by his teachings, transformed the Roman Empire and altered the whole face of the world."

CRIME AND THE JOHN HOWARD SOCIETY

This is an age of contradictions. It is preeminent alike for its barbarity and its humanity. Where in the world's history have been witnessed in so many areas at once such systematic practice of wholesale brutalities; but what age again has seen at work so many organizations for ameliorating our lot? Yet, even in our most humanitarian enterprises the same contradiction again enters. Consider our attitude towards public wrongdoers. It is our way to continue to treat the world's leaders in iniquity—whose subjects at their command slaughter unoffending populations irrespective of condition, age or sex—with toleration, deference, even honor and applause; while we seize upon committers of comparatively petty offences and shut them up with others of their kind and prolong the period of bad companionship in proportion to the offence. And when on expiry, the prisoner is released, we complain if his behavior has not improved and sentence him to more of the same.

This contradiction is not to be resolved by noting it. Better alternatives to prison have yet to be made popular and practicable, but granted the prison system, there is much that can be done to mitigate the defects. How to forestall crime in the first place, how after conviction to lessen its harmful concomitants, and how after the discharge to help restore character, self-respect and social respect, problems like these face our societies for penal reform, of which the John Howard Society in Victoria will be holding its annual public discussion next Friday.

Consider the problem of saving the social respect of the prisoner. Here society at large, the respectable public, is immediately concerned. The trouble is that pending a more radical reform in our penal system, the prisoner on discharge finds the sentence is not yet over. He remains under sentence from the rest of us. Branded as bad company, he is often left to consort with others of that brand; and he has lost his job, if he had any, and his record hinders his getting another. No one can blame the employer for rejecting the ex-prisoner, whom he assumes to be less able and less anxious to make good on that score. But in real competence and character the circles of the legally guilty and innocent overlap; and an applicant repeatedly rejected by society because he has been in prison may turn again to anti-social conduct—he earns his label. His past and his present prejudice his future.

We shall not reduce crime in our midst until we give the offender a fair deal. Often he has not been wisely used before or during his sentence, but a fair deal after it is possible with the generous co-operation of a fair-minded public.

TOURIST TRAFFIC VOLUME

Fears that the economic recession in the United States would reduce British Columbia's tourist traffic have been largely set at rest by the early statistics concerning that trade. Compilations of figures for the first five months of the year show that 73,326 foreign motor cars entered this province at Lower Mainland points of entry, compared with 62,767 for the corresponding period of last year. In the same period 2,584 foreign cars entered through the ports of Victoria and Sidney, compared with 2,016 last year, an increase of more than 27 per cent. Another 1,307 Canadian motor cars came to the Lower Island in the five months, an increase of more than 13 per cent over the figure for the corresponding period of 1937.

British Columbia tourist agencies generally are to be congratulated for their good work, and the Victoria and Island Publicity Bureau has earned special commendation for the efficacy of its work, as reflected in the number of motor tourists coming here. Elsewhere in the Dominion only the Maritimes thus far in the season are able to point to an increase in tourist traffic, and Ontario, the most important province for touring, has experienced a rather sharp decline. The statistics are small compared with the large figures which will come later in the season, but they give the hint that the trade is holding surprisingly well in view of the situation in the United States, and that British Columbia need have no fears of a falling off in the large volume of Summer business that is associated with touring.

Very much of the unrest in men's minds is due to governments having exceeded their legitimate functions and become imbued too much with paternalism. The more the State does for the individual, the more he expects it to do and the more seriously are his powers of initiative and enterprise sapped. He tends to become a robot.

London has a long and dignified architectural tradition behind it, and there is a danger that, in the widespread rebuilding going on, particularly in Central London, the tradition is being abandoned for an international, standardized steel-and-concrete massiveness. English domestic architecture flowered most richly from the early eighteenth century until the early nineteenth. London, in those hundred years, was dowered with much architectural grace and beauty; Berkeley Square, the Adelphi, Regent Street, most of the great ducal palaces, were all part of that heritage. Regent Street and the great houses were lost first. The casualties of the last decade have been much heavier.—London Evening News.

Let us teach ourselves that honorable step, not to outdo discretion.—Shakespeare.

The Weather

SYNOPSIS OF WEATHER CONDITIONS

Pressure remains moderately high on the Pacific Coast and low south of the British Columbia border. The weather has been fair throughout this Province, with high temperature in the Interior, increasing the fire hazard in forest areas.

It has become fair and moderately warm in the Prairie Provinces.

Note and Comment

By Sandham Graves

What an' amazing world is that between high and low water marks at the beach! A lilliput realm now in the atmosphere, now in the ocean; and again half in the air and half in the water. It is called the littoral zone, one of four main divisions of underwater life. Let us call it simply the shore; and here where the shore and water join let us use our eyes a little.

* * *

The tide is out, but coming slowly in. Here at the margin of low tide is a rocky pool that never goes quite dry. Three feet long by one foot wide, it seems at first a dank small valley, between neighboring hills of rocks that tower on either side precipitously. This, a world in little? Nonsense! What life could live in such a narrow scope, upon such mouldy slime? Ah, but watch the tide come in. The valley comes to life in every inch.

* * *

See that dingy row of green and slimy discs along the bottom of the pool. In the water now they bloom like tiny sunflowers, with green and yellow centres, and with a fringe of purple petals around their opened discs. They are the sea anemones. Children call them suckers, and the name is not inapt. Flowers they may look, but animals they are, and predatory.

* * *

Let but a hapless mussel fall into that false but sunny flower, and all the world will rise upwards to engulf it. Those purple petals will lift it from off the fringe and thrust it to the centre. Stinging hairs will bring oblivion, while the deadly blossom closes up, and quaking walls draw in a living morsel towards a horrid centre, there to squeeze, and hold, and drain all of its life away. The very walls distend, to fit around a meal too large for it.

* * *

See that row of sun-baked barnacles upon the rock, like crater cones, chalk-white, but flinty hard. For hours they have not moved, nor given any sign of life. You think perhaps they're dead? Wait until the tide comes in; and while you wait, recall they are the cousins of the crabs. Six legs and eyes enough they had, and swam freely, until they found that place upon the rock. Then they made fast upon their heads to the cold grey stone; cast off their eyes as useless; grew long in body, to keep pace with growing turret shells; and traded feet for fishing nets.

* * *

Ah, here is the tide. Now watch the barnacles. At the entrance of one horny turret now a pointed valve is pivoting; searching for the water. How like a cannon that is raised, and aimed, and finds the range, then fires! The pointed valve now fills the muzzle of the flinty crater. In two halves now it splits. Out comes the fishing net, ballooning in the water; cast and withdrawn, cast and withdrawn, fifty measured times a minute.

* * *

Between the blackened, beard-like tentacles that once were feet, a score of cilia, or hairs, are spread; making a perfect mesh to catch the smallest particle of floating life. Steadily, with rhythmic pulse, the row of barnacles are fishing for their supper. They cast their nets, and draw them in, and cast them out again, untiringly. Touch but the outer shell, and the net goes in, the valve will close, the turret swing, and nothing but a lifeless flinty crater meets the eye again.

* * *

Now the tide has risen several inches. See, that mass of dark brown weed is now a forest, waving graceful plumes in unison upon the ebbing and the flowing of the water. Who lives in such a forest, can you see? Why many live there, surely. Sticklebats are swimming around the flattened stems of seaweed "trees," darting forward, swimming back, or staying motionless and hidden to let an enemy go by on some more desperate errand.

* * *

Watch the forest closely. Why, every tree has got an occupant, it seems. See, here, and there, and there, and everywhere living creatures crawl upwards on the stems; or wave agitated arms from topmost branches; or let go their hold and gently slide to the rocky floor below, to scuttle fast away upon some other mission. Periwinkles, tiny spider crabs, a dozen forms of life frequent that forest, brown and waving on the tide.

* * *

What a topsy-turvy little world it is, down there in that three-foot valley! Limpets sink their flattened base against the rock and hold on tight, their rasping tongues curled under them; though, later, they will cut and tear the succulent seaweed. Whelks, with spiralled houses, prowl restlessly about, each with a file to rasp and saw their way like burglars into the strongest homes. Sea-shore crabs that cast their shells and leave a trail of empty skeletons in every pool, are scurrying.

* * *

Now through the open channel to the pool there comes a stranger. It is a jelly fish; a handful of salt water and a few divided hair-like ribs, and yet, in geometrical design, it fills its transparent parachute and pumps its way along with style and seamanship. Around the outside edge its trailing fringe hangs like lace upon an old-time cuff. The fringe is poisonous, with power to sting if threads too fine to see are broken. Left dry upon the shore, its water oozes out; the slender webbing shrinks; and nothing but a few discolored filaments remain to speak of what once had form and beauty.

* * *

The tide has filled the pool. Down in the dark brown forest, larger forms of life disturb the flattened stems, and prowl about. Above, the barnacles are casting out their nets by squadrons and platoons, in line, in file, in fours. Fifty times a minute, and at each cast a netfull of food too small for human eyes to see, but food for all that. So the endless show goes on, for even in this lilliputian world there's work to do, and mouths to feed.

* * *

Sometimes in the atmosphere, sometimes in the sea, but never for one moment idle, the cavalcades of life adorn the littoral zone. Further out to sea, there's life aplenty in the underwater world, where laminarian, coralline and deep-sea coral regions hold each their worlds, distinct and beautiful. Sometimes these worlds are ruthless, cruel; yet, could man know the truth, it might be that to every living creature life brings some useful purpose, and a task to do.

SOCIAL CREDIT

Sir,—A friend of mine writes: "You are wasting a lot of sincerity in attempting a discussion on Social Credit with Mr. Arthur Warren, who obviously has no interest in the principles of the matter he is, ostensibly, discussing, but rather is doing a bit of refined rabble-rousing with his sententiously orotund periods on the sad state of affairs in Alberta."

A child of eight years knows why Mr. Aberhart was not able to place Social Credit principles into effect in Alberta. As per the news dispatches on the subject for the past two years, Mr. Dunning won't let him. Mr. Warren's sorrow at Mr. Aberhart's perfidy in not bringing Social Credit into effect in the face of disallowances thrown at him from every angle quite fails to move us, and also fails to move Mr. Warren, despite his well-simulated woe.

Mr. Warren is well aware that there is no "dictatorship," in the totalitarian sense, in Social Credit, and he is likewise well aware that in stating that it will be necessary to commit the details of any specific Social Credit plan to experts, the Social Crediters state nothing but obvious common sense. In bringing up all these matters, Mr. Warren merely trots forth straw men for himself to demolish, to the delighted horror of the onlookers.

But while Mr. Warren thus uselessly fans the air he manages to inject some poison into the middle of a paragraph, in the words ". . . . raising the people's hopes on premises proved unsound, schemes proved unworkable . . ."

If this refers to the Social Credit proposals, then Mr. Warren is simply attempting to condition the minds of his readers. Social Credit has not been "proved unsound," and Social Credit schemes have not been "proved unworkable," in Alberta or anywhere else.

Social Credit, as Mr. Warren will discover when he finds out what it is, is simply a proposal to make total purchasing power always sufficient to buy all the goods and services that can be produced. To suggest that Social Credit proposes anything else than this is merely ordinary false witness.

As for Mr. Warren's jitters over the people of Canada being the sovereign authority in this nation, let Mr. Warren cherish his misery. That is what the people are, the sole power, unless Mr. Warren can introduce something to replace the democratic franchise. For when a majority of the people of Canada vote for Social Credit, Social Credit we shall have, and an end of the financial tyranny whereby every man's property and every man's liberty is in pawn to a debt-to-the-banks money system.

FIFTY YEARS AGO TODAY

(From The Daily Colonist of June 12, 1888)

Will Not Transfer Naval Station—Lord Sudeley called the attention of the House of Lords on Monday night to the superior advantage of Burrard Inlet over Esquimalt as a naval station on the Pacific Coast. Lord Elphinstone, on behalf of the Government, said the authorities had been divided in their opinion on the subject, but after full consideration, the Government thought it unwise to transfer the naval station from Esquimalt to the Inlet, which in time of war might become a mere cul-de-sac for our ships. The Government is prepared to spend £31,000 on armaments for Esquimalt, £10,000 on submarine stores and £10,000 on submarine buildings.

Cantata Proceeds to Aid Relief Funds—Every effort is being put forward to make the cantata of "Esther," which will be presented at the Victoria Theatre next Friday evening, a grand success. The performance will be given by the Nanaimo Choral Society, assisted by local talent, and the proceeds will be devoted to augmenting the Wellington & Nanaimo relief funds.

Steam Tug for Fisheries Work—Mr. Alex Ewan has given instructions to the Victoria Machinery Depot for the construction of a steam tug for fishery purposes. The owner says it will outrun anything on the river when built.

GROWERS STATE SITUATION BAD

Strawberry Patches Greatly In Need of Moisture—Losses on Mainland

Lower Vancouver Island growers are becoming alarmed over the 1938 season's crop of strawberries because of continued absence of moisture. The berries have long been without rain, and the situation in Saanich was declared "very bad" by growers there.

If the weather remains dry for any length of time there will not be sufficient berries for jam. Farmers report the hay crop good. Loganberry growers stated conditions were fair, the berries in good shape, but rain needed to carry them through to the ripening stage.

Mainland growers reported thirty-five carloads of strawberries shipped to Prairie points during the past week. Crops on the Mainland are also suffering from lack of rain, and it was estimated the loss to date would reach 20 per cent of a normal yield.

Bows to the Buffalo

"Civilization hands me a laugh," sighed Joe, the Bootblack, sinking wearily onto the green plush seat beside us. Joe's last customer had just disappeared, and in deference to the humidity we decided our shoes didn't need a shine anyway. "Take a look at this piece in the paper, for instance," Joe grunted, passing over the morning edition. "Now that is what I call irony of the first water." Indicated by his polish-stained thumb was a dispatch date-lined Sante Fe, New Mexico. "The department of Indian affairs today condemned a rodeo bow-and-arrow buffalo hunt by Indians on the grounds that it would exploit the redmen and make a living pincushion of the bison," Joe quoted. Our friend relapsed into a brief silence. Knowing Joe, we recognized it as the calm before the storm. "I don't know how that looks to you," he burst out finally, "but it seems to me that if our friends would devote their energies to suppressing the Sino-Japanese and Spanish wars instead of interfering when the few remaining Indians decide to hunt a few of the equally scarce buffalo, they'd be a lot further ahead." Perhaps we should have argued, but as we stated it was warm, and we had work to do. "And if they thought so much of the buffalo why didn't they put them on something bigger than a nickel," was Joe's parting shot as we left the cool shadow of the shop.—J.A.M.

"Sunburn" to You

There's a certain malady, native to the Summer season, that attacks humans very definitely at this period. It is known as an over-abundant absorption of the rays of Old Sol, or more familiarly called sunburn. It is liable to break out anywhere on the body, although the most vital spots seem to be the shoulders, back of the neck, and tip of the nose. Symptoms are overheating, followed by itching and pealing of the outer skin surfaces. Preventives are many and varied, but the most practical is probably to take a sunbath in the shade of the old apple tree.—W.I.F.

Still Popular

Inaugurated sixteen years ago, The Colonist bicycle road race still retains its popularity, judging by the large turnout to witness the sixteenth annual event Friday evening. Thousands of people, jammed together like sardines in a can, crowded the sidewalks on both sides of Quadra Street, to get a glimpse of the start and finish of this cycling classic. It was a great night, and the thrilling finishes certainly delighted the spectators. To the winners we extend our congratulations, and to those who failed to get in the "money," we say better luck next time.—S.T.

Ollie Oppressed

Ollie arrived at the office late and perturbed after an adjournment for lunch. He told us he encountered a motorist at Foul Bay Road while proceeding to the city along Fort Street. Just as Ollie was about to pass, the man pulled a letter from his pocket and proceeded to read it on the steering wheel. Due to the man's erratic driving through trying to read and pilot the car at the same time Ollie was not able to pass until they reached the junction.

Glancing Over Sport

Do you know that Sam Riddle, owner of War Admiral, turned down an offer of $250,000 from a California racing syndicate for the fleet little son of the famous Man o' War? . . . It appears now that the $50,000 Massachusetts Handicap at Suffolk Downs, June 29, is going to be the race of the year. War Admiral is headed there already, Seabiscuit is back in training, and Stagehand is getting all set for the barrier . . . A chap named A. O. Lorne, of Beechwood Avenue, tells me that he has figured from every angle the Louis-Schmeling fight and cannot see the Brown Bomber ruling the roost after the night of June 22. For me that fight is just as easy to pick as the Armstrong-Ross battle . . . Bob Servis, Dayton amateur, ran into the hardest of luck in the second round of the United States open golf meet at Denver last Friday. After scoring a neat 76 on the opening day, to be well up with the leaders, Servis skyrocketed to a miserable 96 the next day, believe it or not. The youngster took nineteen strokes on the sixteenth hole. Imagine being fifteen over par for a single hole, and then having nerve to turn in your card . . . Champion Mary Mackenzie-Grieve goes after her fourth city golf crown this week at the Oak Bay links.—J.D.

Slow Response

Although about three weeks have elapsed since the first warning bell was silenced on the "stop and go" signal at the intersection of Yates and Blanshard Streets, and the single bell system introduced, with the object of speeding up traffic and retraining pedestrians with an inclination to beat the gun, motorists are still slow to get under way when the light changes in their favor at that intersection. Probably their slow response to the change in the system is due to the fact that the other traffic signals along Douglas Street are still ringing two bells. But the fact remains that many drivers go to sleep at the switch and only wake up to the fact that the light is showing green when their attention is drawn to it by a chorus of impatient horns from the rear. It takes a long time to break an old habit.—R.M.

ISLANDS INSTITUTE DIRECTORATE MEETS

SALTSPRING ISLAND, June 11.—A meeting of directors of the Islands Farmers' Institute took place on Monday evening in the Mahon Hall, Ganges, with the president, R. O. King, in the chair.

After routine business, correspondence was dealt with and the following matters brought up for discussion: The building, in the vicinity, of a new powder house; the matter of logging dumps, which have been built on seafront property belonging to the Farmers' Institute; the erecting of the new boundary fence around the Mahon Hall grounds.

The meeting heartily endorsed the proposal of the Ganges Women's Institute to petition the Government to set aside Mount Baynes as a public park for Saltspring Island.

The time used is Pacific standard for the 120th Meridian west. It is counted from 0 to 24 hours, from midnight to midnight. The figures for height serve to distinguish high water from low water. Where blanks occur in the table the tide rises or falls continuously during two successive tidal periods without turning.

More Than Quarter of a Million Found in Home of Masontown, Pennsylvania, Resident Who Wore Old Clothes and Drove a Big Car

MASONTOWN, Pa., June 11 (AP).—Neighbors of Fred Schroyer still were discussing tonight the extent of his fortune, several hundred thousand dollars of which was found in an old iron safe in his lamp-lighted home just outside Masontown.

The seventy-two-year-old recluse died in a Uniontown hospital on May 31, protesting against ministrations by physicians treating him for diabetes.

At 2 o'clock the next morning the four heirs, Mrs. David Gans, of Philadelphia, and her three daughters, arranged for a guard of state motor police about his house, a well-built structure but without running water, electricity or telephone.

Next day the safe was opened before the astonished heirs, police and Attorney Dean D. Sturgiss. After counting 102 $1,000 bills, $100,000 in Liberty bonds and more than $50,000 in school bonds, the remaining stack of bonds and stocks were shuffled aside for a later check.

Neighbors said the old man's only outward show of wealth had been an expensive automobile. In it he used to ride to Uniontown, about fifteen miles away, to make purchases, often tending pennies as payment. He virtually always wore old clothes.

POLICE CHIEFS MEETING

EDMONTON, June 11 (C.P.).—Arrangements for the thirty-fourth annual Canadian Chief Constables' convention that will be held in Edmonton three days starting June 21 have been completed, it was stated here yesterday by A. G. Shute, chief constable of the Edmonton police force. It is expected close to seventy-five chief constables of forces across the Dominion will attend.

STUDENTS GET CERTIFICATES

The closing exercises of the 1938 class of the Provincial Normal School, Mount Tolmie, took place on Friday morning, ending a year filled with interesting work and new and profitable experiences.

V. L. Denton, the principal, presided, and introduced the valedictorian, Miss Anne Galloway, who spoke of the varied experiences of the year, which she compared to a handful of straws, one of which was drawn each day. As with the straws, some of these days were long, others short, but with every one came some gain. She felt the students should appreciate the fact that they had been taught under the new curriculum and would, therefore, be able to carry it out more successfully in their own schools. She spoke also of the benefits the students derived from the library extensions.

Miss Galloway voiced the appreciation of the students to each instructor for the unfailing patience and helpfulness shown. Tribute was paid to B. S. Freeman who, after nineteen years on the Normal School staff, is retiring this year.

At the close of the valedictory speech, a number of certificates for writing were presented by Miss Hinton. Among these were four teachers' diplomas awarded to Misses Emery, Jacobson, Nuttall and Williamson.

Strathcona Trust medals for physical training were presented to Miss M. Emery and H. Barnett.

Each member of the faculty said a few parting words in response to the valedictory, the students' enthusiastic applause indicating their appreciation.

The proceedings concluded with the students' presentation to Mr. Freeman of a desk set and some phonograph records as a token of good will.

BIG JEWEL ROBBERY

PARIS, June 11 (CP-Havas).—Jewelry valued at $85,000 was reported stolen today from the Paris home of Lady Henriette Meyer Davis, first wife of the late Mortimer Davis, of Montreal. Included among the gems, taken from a wall safety-box, was an emerald ring worth $23,000.

Oregon Coast Travel Gains

For 400 miles, the Oregon Coast Highway (U.S. 101) sweeps along the Oregon Coast past such beauty spots as this, near Waldport, where the Alsea River empties into the Pacific Ocean. With warm days and the end of some school terms, travel has multiplied during the past two weeks.

BEEF GRADING WILL BE FREE

Hon. K. C. MacDonald Explains New Service Will Be Illustrative

Inspections in British Columbia's beef grading service will be free, Hon. K. C. MacDonald stated yesterday, on return from a ten-day tour of the Okanagan. The service will start on the Lower Mainland on July 18, under two Federal and one Provincial inspectors, and will be developed as occasion warrants, the Minister of Agriculture said.

Meanwhile, Provincial officials clarified the eighteen regulations passed by order-in-council last week with respect to grading. The four grades to be set up will be choice, good, medium and fair, each with its own definitions in terms of the trade.

The service will be considered as demonstratory at first, Dr. MacDonald said.

Leaving on Tuesday next, with J. B. Munro, deputy minister of agriculture, Dr. MacDonald will visit the Cariboo, Prince George and Skeena on a tour of farmers' institute meetings in the North.

Obituary

CROMWELL—A very large and sympathetic congregation of friends attended, on Saturday afternoon, funeral services conducted by Rev. Dr. J. B. Rowell for Joseph Alfred Cromwell. There were two hymns sung, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" and "Forever With the Lord." Rev. J. Mackie Niven assisted with the services and interment was made in the Royal Oak Burial Park. The following acted as pallbearers: Albert E. Hall, William Stokes, C. V. Borris, A. Richards, A. J. Locke and A. Burt.

CHAMPION—The remains of Mrs. Alice Champion are resting at Sands Mortuary and the funeral will take place on Monday, the cortege leaving the chapel at 1:40 o'clock and services will be conducted in St. Mary's Church, Oak Bay, at 2 o'clock by Archdeacon Nunns. The remains will be laid at rest in Royal Oak Burial Park.

MITCHELL—Funeral services were held on Saturday afternoon in Christ Church Cathedral for Walter Swire Mitchell. Among the many friends attending was a large representation from the Order of Eastern Star, also the Nazarine Shrine No. 1, Order of White Shrine of Jerusalem, and Britannia Lodge, A.F. & A.M. Rev. Alan Gardiner conducted the services, during which the hymns "Alleluia" and "Lead, Kindly Light" were sung. The following acted as honorary pallbearers: H. Mattock, W. B. Stockwood, T. Naden, A. Youngman, J. Foster and H. C. Hills. Cremation followed at Royal Oak, with the following acting as pallbearers: Wor. Bro. W. R. Yule, Wor. Bro. H. C. F. Reston, Bro. E. Bray, Bro. A. Stokes, Bro. G. P. Grant and Bro. G. H. W. Page. McCall Bros. were in charge of the funeral arrangements.

JUBB—There passed away yesterday at St. Joseph's Hospital, after a short illness, Mrs. Sarah Ann Jubb aged sixty-four years, a native of England and resident of Victoria for ten years, her late residence being 202 Dundas Street. She was a former resident of Winnipeg. She leaves in sorrow her husband, George William Jubb, at the family residence; two sons, Joseph, in Regina, and Herbert, in Victoria; seven daughters, Mrs. E. Law and Mrs. H. Seed, Winnipeg; Mrs. D. S. McKinnon, Halifax; Mrs. H. Law and Mrs. R. Thompson, Victoria; Mrs. H. Hanson, Duncan, and Miss Marion Jubb, at home; also three sisters, Mrs. E. Webster, Victoria; Mrs. E. Hadfield, Yorkshire, England, and Mrs. H. Bishop, residing in Australia. The funeral has been arranged to take place from the Thomson Funeral Home on Saturday, June 18, at 3:30 o'clock. Rev. T. R. Lancaster will conduct the service. Interment will be in the Colwood Burial Park.

HUTCHINSON — Funeral services for Mrs. Marjorie E. Hutchinson were held yesterday afternoon in Sands Mortuary Chapel. Rev. F. V. Venables officiated. The congregation sang the hymns, "Abide With Me" and "Peace, Perfect Peace," and Mrs. S. M. Morton, soloist, sang "Some Day We'll Understand." Many floral offerings were received and a large number of sorrowing friends attended the rites. The remains were laid at rest in the Colwood Burial Park. The following acted as pallbearers: J. E. Hamilton, O. Silk, J. S. Dunlop, W. F. Jenkins, G. W. Allen and D. E. Lewis.

PLAN APPEAL ON DECISION

Victoria City Debt Refunding Act to Go Before High Tribunal

It was announced yesterday by P. J. Sinnott, counsel for John Day, that the Victoria City Debt Refunding Act (1937) would be further tested by the Supreme Court of Canada. Mr. Sinnott intimated that Mr. Day had been approached by local bondholders who had undertaken to finance an appeal to the high tribunal.

Last December 10 the act was passed by the Provincial Government, giving the city authority to exchange approximately $15,000,000 worth of outstanding debentures for new refunding bonds.

In a Supreme Court judgment handed down on May 6, Mr. Justice H. B. Robertson declared the Refunding Act ultra vires. On June 7 the British Columbia Appeal Court reversed Mr. Justice Robertson's ruling.

MAYOR NOTIFIED

Mr. Sinnott stated that H. A. Maclean, K.C., city counsel, and Mayor Andrew McGavin had both been notified of the intention to contest the Appeal Court decision in favor of the city.

He added that it would be a test case, and arrangements had been made with the Attorney-General of British Columbia so that no costs would be assessed against either side.

When the city appealed the Supreme Court decision, the Provincial Government became involved in the action.

OLD RESIDENT OF NANAIMO PASSES

NANAIMO, June 11.—A. Vroom Hoyt, aged fifty-seven, resident of Nanaimo for twenty-eight years, died today in the General Hospital following a long illness. Mr. Hoyt was formerly accountant in the Dominion Trust Company here, and later worked for the A. E. Planta real estate firm. He was a prominent Conservative and served for a time as secretary of the Farmers' Institute. He took a prominent part in school affairs in his residence district at Departure Bay, having served on the board of school trustees. He is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Elsie Planta; four daughters, Molly, Kathleen, Barbara and Joan, and one son, Geoffrey, all living at Departure Bay.

A brother, Douglas Hoyt, and a sister, Mrs. R. Curtis, live in Vancouver. Other sisters are Mrs. S. Salsbury, Long Beach, Cal., and Mrs. F. T. Davidson, Halifax.

Private funeral services will take place on Monday afternoon at Westwood-Hirst Funeral Home, Rev. Canon Hitchcox of St. Paul's Church, officiating. The body will be forwarded to Vancouver for cremation.

FORMER SCHOOL TEACHER DIES

Miss Margaret Johnson Was at One Time a Member of Victoria Teaching Staff

DUNCAN, June 11.—According to a wire received here today by Mrs. O. T. Symthe, the death occurred in Winnipeg yesterday of Miss Margaret Johnson, who had been a member of the staff of The Winipeg Free Press for the past fourteen years. Previous to that time, Miss Johnson was for a number of years a member of the teaching staff of Victoria schools.

She was a member of St. John's Church choir and of the Women's Auxiliary. For her work in the Women's Auxiliary she was awarded a life membership. A graduate of the Oregon Agricultural College, she became garden and poultry editor of The Winnipeg Free Press, and two years ago was made a life member of the Manitoba Horticultural Society.

Besides her sister, Mrs. Smythe, she is survived by two sisters in Winnipeg.

ORDERS CONSCRIPTION

SHANGHAI, June 11 (AP).—General Chiang Kai-Shek today ordered an unprecedented conscription of men for the army, regardless of family, wealth or influence.

Advices from Hankow said eventually the conscription would be made general throughout China on a basis of population of the provinces.

The general, it was said, had ordered it be applied with fairness to the sons of the wealthy as well as to the peasants and coolies who heretofore have borne the major burden.

SALTSPRING SCHOOLS MAY BE CONSOLIDATED

SALTSPRING ISLAND, June 11.—On Wednesday evening a meeting took place in the Mahon Hall, Ganges, when Gavin C. Mouat explained in detail information received from the Government in connection with the proposed scheme for the consolidation of schools on Saltspring Island.

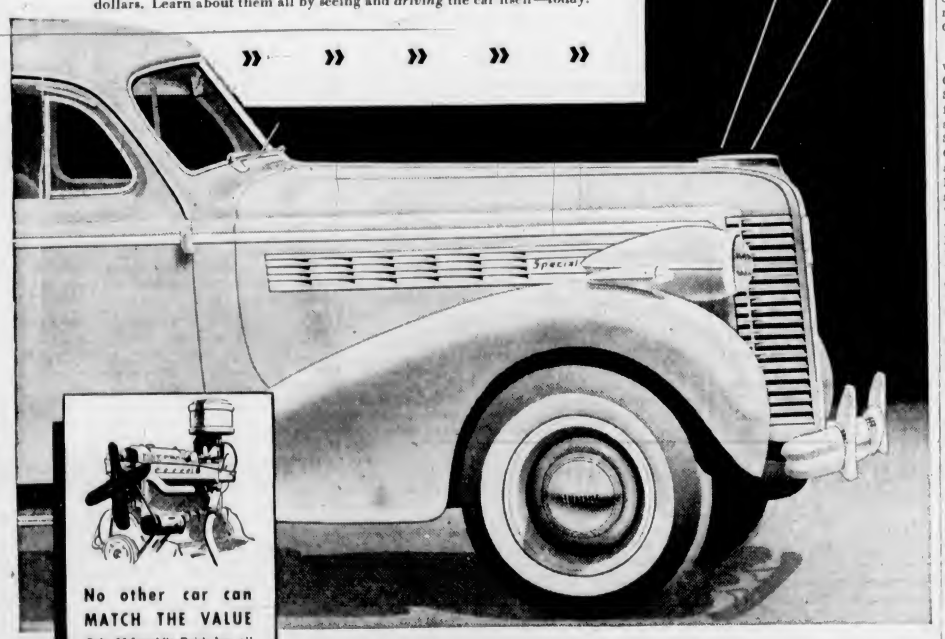

Mr. Mouat will hold a series of meetings during the week at various Island centres to deal with the matter, which at present is foremost in the minds of many Island residents. The question will be finally decided next week by public vote.

DIES FROM INJURIES

VANCOUVER, June 11 (C.P.).—Roderick Minette, twenty-one, died in hospital here today from a fractured neck suffered on Sunday while diving at Bowen Island, about twenty miles north of Vancouver in Howe Sound. Minette apparently struck his head when he dove. He was rushed to hospital here by speedboat and ambulance.

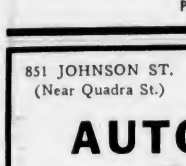

CONFEDERATION LIFE FOR STRENGTH, SERVICE AND SECURITY.

"And at that, Bob, I intend to have more . . .
". . . because life insurance is the one sure method to provide for all contingencies. The two policies I now have with Confederation Life, with Total Disability Benefits, are a good starter. They provide my family with $10,000 if I should die, and will pay me an income of $100 a month if I should become totally disabled through sickness or accident. I am going to put on additional insurance, so that if I live to retirement age, as I hope to do, my wife and I will be able to live in reasonable comfort and independence."

CONTINUE PLAY IN TITLE MEET

Favorites Advance at C.P.R. Club Courts—Heavy Schedule Today

Favorites advanced yesterday in the annual C.P.R. (Victoria) Tennis Club championship tourney, but met with stiff opposition in a number of matches.

The feature fixture of the day's play saw Stan "Busher" Jackson defeat Harry Forse in a three-set battle in which thirty-seven games were played. Jackson took the first and last sets with scores of 8-6, but dropped the middle set, 3-6.

Playing in the mixed doubles, Miss V. Pearson and A. Bigham were extended to an extra set by Miss P. Pennock and C. Margison before finally winning, 6-3, 4-6, 6-2.

Today's list is one of the heaviest in many seasons and tournament officials ask the co-operation of all players in order that the play can be kept to schedule. First matches today will start at 8:30 o'clock.

BIRDMEN WILL PLAY VICTORIA

Baseball Nines to Clash Tomorrow Evening at Royal Athletic Park

Held to a 5-5 tie by the Navy ball tossers Friday, Manager Tommy Restall's Victoria Baseball Club will be gunning for victory tomorrow evening when they oppose the Eagles at the Royal Athletic Park. The encounter will get under way at 6:15 o'clock, with Steve Redgrave calling the balls and strikes.

The Victoria Club is leading the Humphries Cup series with a slim margin over the Pitzer & Nex aggregation, but in order to retain this coveted berth they must turn back the feathered tribe. Ted Maitland, husky right-hander, will probably go to the slab for the Victoria Club. Bill Bridgewood, at the helm of the Eagles, will be expected to send Lloyd Jones, his ace southpaw against the league leaders.

Anglican Young People

ST. ALBAN'S

St. Alban's A.Y.P.A. held its regular business meeting in the hall on Friday evening. A beach party at Cadboro Bay on June 24 was discussed and further particulars will be announced later. At the county fair to be held in the Memorial Hall by the Local Council of on Wednesday, St. Alban's branch will be in charge of home-made candy. Marguerite Anderton was elected sport captain for the Local Council sports day. St. Alban's A.Y.P.A. has charge of a stall at St. Alban's fair to be held on June 22.

PROGRAMMES BY FENCE

Prairie farmers in Canada's drought area can't afford phones. So they're using wire fences, electrified by batteries, headphones and loudspeakers to talk to each other. And those who don't have wireless sets get their friends' programmes in the same way.

The legality of all this was questioned in Saskatchewan Provincial Legislature the other day, but ministers declined to interfere.

You couldn't expect politicians to object to wire-pooling, could you?

City and District

No Meeting—Mayor Andrew McGavin announced yesterday that the City Council would not meet tomorrow night.

Store Entered—A box containing 100 tubes of copper-covered BB shot has been missing since Friday from Peden Bros.' Sporting Goods Store, C. Bernard reported to police yesterday afternoon.

Tools Stolen—H. LeMarquand, 48 San Juan Avenue, informed police early yesterday morning that a set of tools had been stolen from his automobile while it was parked on Douglas Street, near Belleville Street.

School Officers — Barbara Hutcheon has been elected president of the Victoria High School Students' Council, succeeding Betty May Cameron. Donald Fields is the new vice-president, and Enid Brown, the secretary. The new executive will not take office until September.

Is Delayed—R. W. Beck, public utilities analyst and engineer, has been delayed in the Eastern United States and will not arrive here until next Wednesday, according to word received at the City Hall yesterday. Mr. Beck is adviser to the City Council on electric light and power franchise matters.

Creek Work—To improve Bowker Creek drainage, the city engineer's department will start work on the culvert under Foul Bay Road during the forthcoming week. Later in the year grades may be changed and the creek bed cleaned out. Favorable progress is reported on replacement of the Crescent Road storm sewer.

Prairie Publicity—A full-page article on the scenic attractions of Greater Victoria appeared in a recent issue of The Edmonton Journal, "Enjoy the Ocean Breezes—Follow the Birds to Victoria," read the banner across the top of the page, which also contained in addition to the story a picture of the Gorge Bridge.

Money Stolen—B. McLagan, Vancouver, reported to police last night that his wallet containing $54 in bills, was stolen from his car parked at Thetis Lake yesterday afternoon. Mr. McLagan left his automobile while he went swimming, and on his return found that the door window had been forced and his wallet gone.

Oak Bay Conservatives—The June meeting of Ward Six and Seven, Oak Bay Conservatives, will be held at St. Mary's Hall, Oak Bay, tomorrow, commencing at 8 p.m. Special request is made for a representative attendance, in view of an agenda dealing with the provincial convention of the party and other matters, ward officials said.

Sleeping Sickness— The city health department report for the past week showed a case of sleeping sickness, the first on record here for a number of years. The victim, who was the wife of a sailor, died last week. Other cases of contagious diseases reported were eight of scarlet fever, four whooping cough, three mumps and two of chicken pox.

Conclude Season—"Skipper" McLeod and his "Versatile Vets," Vancouver variety entertainers, concluded their three-day season in Victoria at the Empire Theatre last night. The all-male company, whose comical female impersonations particularly delighted their audiences, were given an enthusiastic reception by last night's audience and responded to many encores.

Postpone Rose Show—At the annual meeting of the Oak Bay Rose Society held in the Municipal Hall Friday evening, it was decided not to hold a rose show this year. Instead a meeting will be held in October to make arrangements for a big show in 1939. Lack of enthusiasm was credited with the cancellation of an exhibition this year. Mr. Lea was elected president, and other officers will be chosen at the next meeting.

Y.M.C.A. Movie — Seven more scenes of Y.M.C.A. activities were shot by the Camera Club after Friday night's meeting. Members will meet at the Y.M.C.A. at 7:30 o'clock on Friday evening for the annual trip to the Dominion Experimental Farm. The movies which have been completed will be shown at this meeting. A gift of a safelight from George Bonavia as gratefully accepted.

Tourist Group—A luncheon meeting of the recently organized Tourist Trade Group of the Chamber of Commerce will be held in Spencer's dining-room next Tuesday at 12:10 noon. It is hoped to receive suggestions from members as to what can be done at once to make conditions most attractive and to retain the tourist business in this city. The executive will submit some ideas which were discussed at the first executive meeting.

Saanich Conservatives—The monthly meeting of the Saanich Conservative Association will be held Tuesday in the Conservative Rooms, Campbell Building, at 8 p.m. Urgent business in connection with the forthcoming conventions will require the attendance of every member. Constitutional matters and the appointment of a new secretary to replace the former officer, who has moved to another riding, will also be on the agenda.

At Army Citadel — Adjutant and Mrs. A. Dietz, commanding officers of the Eureka corps, California, arrived in the city Friday for a short holiday furlough and will be the guest speakers today at the morning and evening meetings at the Salvation Army Citadel. Both were attached to the Victoria corps twenty-three years ago, the adjutant being the bandmaster of the Junior Boys' Band and their marriage took place here. They hope to meet many old friends during their visit.

Back From Fair—W. Lloyd Craig, director of industrial and tourist development for the province, returned last week from San Francisco, where he made further arrangements for a British Columbia exhibit there in 1939. Mr. Craig referred in terms of appreciation to extensive preparations being made on Treasure Island, in San Francisco Harbor, for the accommodation of the fair. July 1, 1939, will be declared "British Columbia Day" at the exhibition, Mr. Craig stated.

Victorian Will Compete in American Runabout Championship This Summer

HARRISON HOT SPRINGS, June 11 (C.)—History will be made in this Coast district lake resort August 27 and 28, when the United States national runabout championship will be decided outside that country for the first time, in conjunction with the regatta to be held here by the British Columbia Outboard Association.

Also at stake will be the Pacific Coast title races in hydroplanes and runabouts of all classes.

British Columbia's outstanding contender will be Bob Driscoll, of Victoria, now in his senior year at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, who is expected to enter at least four events.

H. C. Jackson, in charge of the meet, said yesterday Gar Wood, Jr., son of the famous United States boat and automobile racer, might compete in the runabout events.

GREENSOMES CANCELED

Due to the fact that the women's city golf championship will be run off at the Victoria Golf Club this week the usual Wednesday mixed greensome tournament has been canceled.

REAL CAREFUL

He was new to the district and the "local." Three were playing darts. He was invited to make a fourth. "I've never played darts," he said. Under pressure he took a hand.

They explained how he scored a "double" by throwing the dart in the narrow ring space. After he had done it three times without effort, there was silent murder in the air.

"Honest, I've never played before," he protested. "I've got some darts at home, but no board. I use them for killing flies on the wall."

DEFENCE LEAGUE MEETING

A meeting of Victoria Division No. 1, Canadian Defence League, will be held tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in the A.O.F. Hall on Cormorant Street.

REGINA MAN PASSES

REGINA, June 11 (C.)—Arthur L. Wheatley, sixty-four, prominent businessman here for thirty-two years, died today. He had been ill since last November.

THREE EUROPEAN CAPITALS IN QUAKE

Germany and the Netherlands felt the shocks along with England, France and Belgium.

WORST IN BELGIUM

The quake was described as the most severe in Belgium's history. Brussels boulevards were suddenly thronged with frightened crowds. Factories and homes alike were evacuated as roof tiles crashed to earth and windows were shattered. Reports from all parts of the country told of a "thunder-like rolling noise" accompanying the shocks.

Telephone service was disrupted. The people who rushed into the streets clutched food and money. At Ostend, Belgium, cafe loungers ran in every direction, but a British police band marching along the Rue Royale did not skip a note.

HEAVY IN FRANCE

The shocks were heavy throughout France's northern section. At Roubaix people were knocked off their feet. Telephone and telegraph service was interrupted for an hour.

Walls cracked at Lille, where the city meteorological instruments were broken. Short circuits in electric wiring started many fires.

Scenes were similar in the Netherlands and in Germany's Rhineland. Furniture moved in Cologne houses, and Aachen felt two shocks.

England felt what was described by S. L. Shaw, seismologist of the West Bromwich Observatory, as "a good, big shock for the British Isles." The quake's epicentre was said to be in the North Sea, about 250 miles northeast of London.

Says Mussolini Will Keep Word

QUEBEC, June 11 (C.)—Sir Ronald Graham, P.C., former British Ambassador to Italy, described the recently concluded Anglo-Italian pact as "excellent," when he arrived on the liner Empress of Britain. Sir Ronald said in a brief interview that Mussolini, with whom he was associated for many years, was a remarkable man, is charming in his personal contacts with people, and will keep his word with regard to withdrawing volunteers from Spain.

Garden Fete And Bridge Outstanding

At "Raymond House," the lovely home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Boucher, Belleville Street, a delightful afternoon was spent yesterday when a garden party was held under the auspices of Oak Bay Chapter No. 42, Order of Eastern Star. In the evening, an enjoyable bridge party was well attended, ten tables being in progress.

The party was opened by Mrs. Joseph Rose, first worthy matron of the chapter, and at the conclusion of her opening address, she was presented with a corsage bouquet of pink carnations and sweet peas by Mrs. C. Harrison, worthy matron. Mrs. Harrison was assisted by Mrs. J. Tubman, associate matron, in welcoming the large number of guests during the afternoon.

Tea was served at individual tables on the lawn, and silver vases of pansies formed the centrepieces on the tables. The tea arrangements were under the direction of Mrs. J. A. Anderson, and it was announced later in the day that Mr. Boucher had won the special afternoon tea prize, a beautiful rose bowl.

Mrs. R. Taylor was the general convener, and much credit was due her to the success of the fete. Attractively arranged stalls were placed about the garden, and included home cooking in charge of Mrs. C. McAllister, assisted by Mrs. E. Marshall; candy, Mrs. C. Kinney, and fancywork, Miss Peggy Green; while the popular game of housie-housie was in charge of Mrs. S. Dawe.

Mr. F. Boucher supervised the evening bridge and following the games, refreshments were served. The proceeds from the affair will go to the chapter's general fund.

"What did he say when he came back?"

"Nothing. He just went abroad again."

Have Returned to Their Home Here

Commander the Rt. Hon. Viscount Colville of Culross, R.N. (Ret.), the Viscountess Colville and the Master of Colville, photographed on their arrival in Montreal from London aboard the Cunard White Star liner Ausonia. They returned to Victoria on Friday afternoon. Viscount Colville is in Canada to complete arrangements for the permanent closing of his residence at Point Colville, Saanichton, where he has resided since his retirement from the navy in 1919. A member of the House of Lords, he is planning to make his future residence in Kincardineshire, Scotland.

TODAY'S RECIPE

STRAWBERRY Pie—One pie shell, one quart strawberries, three-fourths cup sugar, one cup water, two teaspoons cornstarch. Fill pie shell with largest berries set on stem-end. Crush rest of berries and add water, sugar and the cornstarch mixed with a little water. Cook until thickened and pour over berries in shell. Peaks will stick up. Put in refrigerator for about two hours. Serve with whipped cream, garnished with choice berries.

Clubs and Societies

Qu-Alex Girls' Club

The monthly meeting of the Qu-Alex Girls' Club was held on Friday at the home of Miss Marjorie Morris, 54 Wellington Avenue. The special guests were Miss Wilma McIlmoyl and Mrs. M. Purdy, Vancouver. Committees for games, refreshments, etc., were chosen for the club social to be held on June 20. It was decided to hold the next glove-making class on Thursday at the home of Mrs. H. Barraclough, 1878 Cochrane Street. All members wishing to visit the Solarium are to meet at the Blue Line Taxi Stand on Sunday, July 10, at 10 a.m. The next regular club meeting will be held on July 15 by Mrs. M. Thorsten and Mrs. H. Barraclough at the home of the latter. A theatre party and tea afterwards at Holley's Cafe has been arranged for Friday, August 19. After the business session, the game "musical romance" was played. First prize was won by Miss Helen Atack, while Misses Ruth Coates and Charlotte Yeamans won the consolation awards. The "mystery box" was won by Sheila McAllister, and the "lucky cup" by Florence Malcolm. Later refreshments were served by the hostess from a table prettily centred with a large silver basket of pale blue and yellow lupins.

Golden Link Auxiliary

The Golden Link Auxiliary of First United Church met recently at the home of Mrs. W. S. Dawson. A buffet supper was served under the direction of Mrs. W. Hudson. Miss M. McKillican presided and there were over forty members and friends present. The theme of the meeting was temperance. Mrs. J. D. Gordon, Vancouver, honorary president of the Conference Branch, spoke briefly on missions and missionaries, mentioning especially Mrs. Barker, a returned missionary from Korea. Mrs. W. G. Wilson gave a message of inspiration for the future of the auxiliary. Miss Gibson, a visitor from England, brought greetings. Miss Marion Mitchell, accompanied by Miss Jessie Smith, sang two solos. Miss Hazel Stewart and Miss Jessie Smith led the group in worship service. An interesting panel discussion entitled "Women as Homemakers or as Homebreakers," which explained some evils attendant on intemperance, was presented by Mrs. T. Smith, Miss Helen Boulton, Miss Margerie Brown and Miss Nina Joyce. Miss Pearl More expressed thanks to those taking part in the meeting and to Mrs. Dawson for her hospitality.

Chemainus W.A.

Mrs. W. J. Porter, president of St. Michael and All Angels' Branch of the Anglican M.S.C.C., was surprised at her home recently when the members of both junior and senior branches joined by the members of the Altar Guild, planned a party and appreciation gift. Mrs. Porter has for the past twenty years been active in all branches of church work, serving several times as W.A. president, church committee member, and Sunday school teacher and superintendent. Contests and singing were enjoyed during the evening, the winners being Mesdames Allester, Neale and Lang. After refreshments, Mrs. Lang, as the eldest W.A. member present, having joined twenty-six years ago, presented Mrs. Porter with a beautiful silk umbrella. She also, on behalf of the members, gave to Mrs. Aiken, who will leave shortly for a vacation trip to England, a traveling companion case. Both ladies were taken completely by surprise, and expressed their pleasure.

Hostesses at Shower

Mrs. George Laird and her sister, Miss Kathleen Burnett, were hostesses at a miscellaneous shower given in honor of Miss Florence Siddall, a July bride-to-be, on Friday evening at Mrs. Laird's home on Orchard Avenue. Delphiniums and roses decorated the reception rooms, and when the guest of honor arrived she was presented with a pretty corsage bouquet of rosebuds and maidenhair fern. The gifts were concealed in the hold of a "good-luck ship," which sailed on a sea of green tulle. Games and contests were enjoyed, the winners being Mrs. M. Laird, Mrs. T. Stevenson, Jr., Mrs. T. Moffett, Misses V. Stevenson and B. Johnston. The centrepiece for the supper table consisted of a miniature bridal party, who stood beneath a trellis of Sweetheart roses and ferns, flanked by lighted pink tapers in silver holders and small vases of roses. The invited guests were Mrs. E. P. Siddall, Mrs. J. F. Gardiner, Mrs. D. W. Burnett, Mrs. M. Laird, Mrs. G. Green, Mrs. T. Stevenson, Sr., Mrs. W. H. May, Mrs. H. Nancarrow, Jr., Mrs. F. Old Girls' Reunion

Norfolk House Old Girls held their annual reunion yesterday, the programme beginning with a luncheon at the boarding house, 615 St. Charles Street, and continuing into an afternoon of tennis and other games followed by tea. Covers were laid for twenty at the luncheon, when four of the school staff, including the headmistress, Miss D. W. Atkins, Mrs. I. C. Cheetham, Miss E. Hart and Mrs. A. Graham, were with the girls around the charmingly-arranged tables. The school colors, white and green, were carried out in the table decorations, "N.H.S." (Norfolk House School) being embossed in white dianthus on a green background at the head table, and green and white napkins and green and white china emphasizing the motif. The Old Girls' Association was represented by the president, Miss J. Marriott; Mrs. Jack Childs, and Misses B. MacIntosh, G. Scoby, T. Todd, K. Mackenzie, M. Izard, P. and B. Gibson, B. Garrard, C. Musgrave, V. Harloch, B. Sloan, B. Fitzpatrick, R. Gillespie, E. Ketchen and A. Eberts.

Women's Institutes

ROYAL OAK

The monthly meeting of the Royal Oak Institute was held in its hall on Thursday afternoon, when Miss Oldfield presided and welcomed a number of visitors. The aims and objects were read by Mrs. P. M. Mouckton and a satisfactory financial report submitted by Miss Eva Phillips. Mrs. K. Mead-Robins was elected as official delegate to the provincial conference of Women's Institutes, to be held in Vancouver on July 6, 7 and 8. Mrs. Hobbs reported on the pottery classes; the next will be held on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. F. Hayward reported for the public and child welfare committee, and Mrs. H. Thompson, convener of the agriculture committee, stated that wool had been purchased to make quilts in the Fall. The members also approved starting a first aid class in the Fall. It was decided to hold a strawberry dance in the hall on Thursday. The annual strawberry card party will be held on Thursday, June 23. Arrangements were also made for a garden party to be held at the home of Mrs. H. W. Bassett, West Saanich Road, on Wednesday, June 29. Conveners were named as follows: Outdoor amusements, Mrs. P. M. Monckton; bridge, Mrs. L. H. McQueen; candy, Mrs. V. Robinson and Mrs. K. Brown; home cooking, Miss Eva Phillips and Mrs. A. D. Grieve, and teas, Mrs. T. T. Hutchison and Mrs. F. Hayward. The annual picnic which will be held during the latter part of July will be held at Woodside Farm, Sooke. Preliminary notice of the annual November bazaar was given by Miss Oldfield and at the next meeting, which will be held in September, the arts and crafts committee will be the conveners. Refreshments were served by members of the sick, visiting and welcome committee. In the evening there were eight tables in play at the fortnightly card party and prizes were won by the following: First lady, Mrs. A. Brown; first gentleman, Mr. G. W. Pettit; second lady, Mrs. A. D. Grieve; second gentleman, Mr. B. Hoole. Hostesses for the evening were Miss K. Oldfield, Mrs. H. C. Oldfield, Mrs. K. Mead-Robins and Mrs. G. W. Pettit.

CRAIGFLOWER

The resignations of Mrs. Rankin and Mrs. Gouge from the finance committee of the Craigflower Institute were read at the monthly meeting of the Institute held on Friday afternoon at the old school, with Mrs. Fieldhouse presiding. Mrs. Pearson and Mrs. Rines accepted the appointments to the vacant positions. Mrs. Fieldhouse reported the business transacted regarding the purchase of property, and a special meeting will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock at Lumley's store. Mrs. Langley asked all members interested in forming a dramatic club to meet at Mrs. Clark's home on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. A gingham dance will be held on Friday at St. Martin's-in-the-Field Hall. There will be an entertainment from 8 to 9 o'clock, after which there will be modern and old-time music for dancing. A prize will be given for the best gingham dress. Refreshments will be served. On Saturday, Mrs. Hudson and Miss Warren will be in charge of a home-cooking stall. Members may leave their donations at the stores of Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Lumley, Mrs. Pringle and Mrs. Brookman. The next meeting will be held on Friday, July 8. Mrs. Pearson, Mrs. Rankin, Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. Philbrook were hostesses for the afternoon.

P.-T A. Activities

JAMES BAY

A display arranged by the domestic science and manual training departments will be given under the auspices of the James Bay P.-T.A. in South Park School on June 23. Old Girls' Reunion

Norfolk House Old Girls held their annual reunion yesterday, the programme beginning with a luncheon at the boarding house, 615 St. Charles Street, and continuing into an afternoon of tennis and other games followed by tea. Covers were laid for twenty at the luncheon, when four of the school staff, including the headmistress, Miss D. W. Atkins, Mrs. I. C. Cheetham, Miss E. Hart and Mrs. A. Graham, were with the girls around the charmingly-arranged tables. The school colors, white and green, were carried out in the table decorations, "N.H.S." (Norfolk House School) being embossed in white dianthus on a green background at the head table, and green and white napkins and green and white china emphasizing the motif. The Old Girls' Association was represented by the president, Miss J. Marriott; Mrs. Jack Childs, and Misses B. MacIntosh, G. Scoby, T. Todd, K. Mackenzie, M. Izard, P. and B. Gibson, B. Garrard, C. Musgrave, V. Harloch, B. Sloan, B. Fitzpatrick, R. Gillespie, E. Ketchen and A. Eberts.

Women's Institutes

ROYAL OAK

The monthly meeting of the Royal Oak Institute was held in its hall on Thursday afternoon, when Miss Oldfield presided and welcomed a number of visitors. The aims and objects were read by Mrs. P. M. Monckton and a satisfactory financial report submitted by Miss Eva Phillips. Mrs. K. Mead-Robins was elected as official delegate to the provincial conference of Women's Institutes, to be held in Vancouver on July 6, 7 and 8. Mrs. Hobbs reported on the pottery classes; the next will be held on Thursday afternoon. Mrs. F. Hayward reported for the public and child welfare committee, and Mrs. H. Thompson, convener of the agriculture committee, stated that wool had been purchased to make quilts in the Fall. The members also approved starting a first aid class in the Fall. It was decided to hold a strawberry dance in the hall on Thursday. The annual strawberry card party will be held on Thursday, June 23. Arrangements were also made for a garden party to be held at the home of Mrs. H. W. Bassett, West Saanich Road, on Wednesday, June 29. Conveners were named as follows: Outdoor amusements, Mrs. P. M. Monckton; bridge, Mrs. L. H. McQueen; candy, Mrs. V. Robinson and Mrs. K. Brown; home cooking, Miss Eva Phillips and Mrs. A. D. Grieve, and teas, Mrs. T. T. Hutchison and Mrs. F. Hayward. The annual picnic which will be held during the latter part of July will be held at Woodside Farm, Sooke. Preliminary notice of the annual November bazaar was given by Miss Oldfield and at the next meeting, which will be held in September, the arts and crafts committee will be the conveners. Refreshments were served by members of the sick, visiting and welcome committee. In the evening there were eight tables in play at the fortnightly card party and prizes were won by the following: First lady, Mrs. A. Brown; first gentleman, Mr. G. W. Pettit; second lady, Mrs. A. D. Grieve; second gentleman, Mr. B. Hoole. Hostesses for the evening were Miss K. Oldfield, Mrs. H. C. Oldfield, Mrs. K. Mead-Robins and Mrs. G. W. Pettit.

CRAIGFLOWER

The resignations of Mrs. Rankin and Mrs. Gouge from the finance committee of the Craigflower Institute were read at the monthly meeting of the Institute held on Friday afternoon at the old school, with Mrs. Fieldhouse presiding. Mrs. Pearson and Mrs. Rines accepted the appointments to the vacant positions. Mrs. Fieldhouse reported the business transacted regarding the purchase of property, and a special meeting will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock at Lumley's store. Mrs. Langley asked all members interested in forming a dramatic club to meet at Mrs. Clark's home on Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock. A gingham dance will be held on Friday at St. Martin's-in-the-Field Hall. There will be an entertainment from 8 to 9 o'clock, after which there will be modern and old-time music for dancing. A prize will be given for the best gingham dress. Refreshments will be served. On Saturday, Mrs. Hudson and Miss Warren will be in charge of a home-cooking stall. Members may leave their donations at the stores of Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Lumley, Mrs. Pringle and Mrs. Brookman. The next meeting will be held on Friday, July 8. Mrs. Pearson, Mrs. Rankin, Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. Philbrook were hostesses for the afternoon.

P.-T A. Activities

JAMES BAY

A display arranged by the domestic science and manual training departments will be given under the auspices of the James Bay P.-T.A. in South Park School on June 23. Handicraft, block printing, pressed flowers and posters will also be displayed and prizes will be given. There will be a table of hobbies which will be non-competitive. A musical programme will be given under the convenership of Mrs. E. Day, and refreshments will be served at a nominal cost. All parents and friends of the pupils, as well as members of other parent-teacher associations, are cordially invited to attend.

FOUND GUILTY IN THEFT CASE

Charles W. Abbott and John A. McRae to Receive Sentences Tomorrow

In the city police court yesterday morning, Magistrate Henry C. Hall found Charles W. Abbott and John A. McRae guilty of a charge of breaking and entering the hotel room of I. Kitagawa and stealing $4 by night. The accused were remanded until tomorrow morning for sentence.

In moving that the charge be dismissed, Richard C. Lowe, the defence counsel, submitted there was no evidence to show that the accused broke into and entered Mr. Kitagawa's room. He sought to prove that the only connection the accused had with an allegedly stolen pocketbook was when Abbott and McRae handed it to the complainant and told him they found it on the hotel stairway.

Called to the stand in his own defence, Abbott testified that he found a pocketbook inside the hotel doorway as he was entering about 6 o'clock on the morning of June 5 to rent room.

FINDS WALLET

He told of meeting Mr. Kitagawa, who seized the pocketbook, and told him it had been stolen. Abbott explained finding the article, but Kitagawa telephoned for the police. When McRae suggested they had better leave, both men walked down the stairs. Abbott denied opening the pocketbook or entering any hotel room. He also stated that he did not run down Yates Street.

Cross-examined by Claude L. Harrison, city prosecutor, Abbott admitted three previous convictions in criminal courts. He claimed the police tried to "strong arm" him and would not allow him to explain the circumstances of finding the pocketbook.

McRae corroborated Abbott's evidence in regard to finding the pocketbook on the hotel stairs, and the encounter with Mr. Kitagawa. He also denied they had been on an upper floor of the hotel, or in any room.

In reviewing the evidence, Magistrate Hall stated: "I disbelieve the evidence of the accused, and find each guilty. Remanded until Monday for sentence."

HIGH COMMISSIONERS MAY BE APPOINTED

OTTAWA, June 11 (CP).—Appointment of high commissioners to one or more of the autonomous Dominions of the Empire is under consideration and action may be taken shortly, Prime Minister Mackenzie King told the House of Commons yesterday.

Canada's only High Commissioner is in London, but it has been rumored for some time similar appointments would be made to South Africa, Australia, and New Zealand, with the likelihood those countries would also send high commissioners to Canada.

Oh, My Poor Legs

I SIMPLY MUST SIT DOWN

ELASTO HELPS LEG SUFFERERS To Their Feet Again!

IT'S NO passing affliction to suffer Varicose Veins, with swollen, ungainly legs, and the resulting aches and pains. How well YOU should know it . . . only just able to drag yourself around in your daily work. Even walking is a burden and normal activities are denied you by the ache and weariness in your legs. And that's not the worst! Varicose veins are bad enough, but neglect frequently leads to developments such as "Bad Leg" and other distressing ailments.

Don't Wait! There's QUICK RELIEF at Hand!

Don't "give in." Resolve to get back on your feet. Cast off the throbbing aches and weariness. Instead of painful days, seek buoyant activity. Fill in the coupon below for a FREE SAMPLE of ELASTO and interesting booklet describing how this Therapeutic Remedy is bringing joy and quick relief to sufferers all over the country. This booklet explains in simple language what frequently brings on Varicose Veins and describes the Elasto method of treating them through the blood.

Suffice it to say here that Elasto helps to supply a deficiency in the weakened tissues and to build up the recuperative powers. It is a remedy that works logically in harmony with Nature's own laws of healing. Prepared in small, delicate tablets by a special process, Elasto dissolves instantly on the tongue. It is immediately absorbed and starts coursing on its way to build up the impoverished system. Nothing quite like Elasto has ever been offered to the general public before. It represents an effective method of treatment since it works to remove the cause, and it is pleasant to take, economical in use, and it ACTS!

Read What Users of Elasto Say:

"Since I started taking Elasto I can go about my work in comfort and without pain."
"My bad leg sores have now healed."
"A great improvement in my legs since I have taken Elasto."
"I am no longer troubled with Varicose Veins."
"My Doctor highly praises Elasto," etc., etc.
"Now walk long distances with ease."

RURAL SCHOOL AREA PROPOSED

Lower Island Trustees Discuss Move With Provincial Departmental Officials

SHAWNIGAN LAKE, June 11. — A meeting of the Lower Vancouver Island Rural School Trustees' Association was held in the Shawnigan Lake School on Friday night to discuss progress for establishing a proposed rural high school area in these districts. The Department of Education was represented by Inspectors W. G. Gamble and W. A. Plenderleith. School boards represented were Bench, Cowichan Station, Mill Bay, Shawnigan Lake and Sylvania.

PETITION PRESENTED

The original petition to the department signed by the district trustees was read, together with consequent correspondence between Dr. Willis and the secretary. The proposed change to a larger administrative unit was explained as a plan to give each district representation on the high school board and a voice as to the amount of the cost and the method of defraying it.

EXPRESS APPROVAL

The inspectors expressed the approval of the department and its willingness to assist, and suggested that a committee be formed to work out a detailed budget, with the cost for each district, and to prepare the data for presentation to the ratepayers at the annual meetings. The commitee was appointed as follows: W. G. Gamble (representing the department), R. P. Weber and O. B. Meredith.

INTEREST OF CHILDREN

At the request of the meeting, Mr. Gamble gave an enlightening talk on the merits of the proposed change, stressing the advantages to the children as being of first importance. In assuring the meeting of official approval, he said that the Department of Education always endeavored to advance the best system of education. "If everyone works in harmony to an end, they can attain it," said Mr. Gamble.

Dr. Plenderleith supported Mr. Gamble's address and offered practical advice in the search for statistics. R. P. Weber, president of the association, was chairman.

TRANSPORTATION TO BE DISCUSSED

B.C. Electric to Take Up Street Car System Question With City Council

A reply to an inquiry of the City Council in regard to transportation matters was received at the City Hall yesterday from A. T. Goward, vice-president and general manager of the B.C. Electric Railway Company, Ltd.

At the suggestion of Mayor Andrew McGavin, on June 1 the council wrote to Mr. Goward, asking if the company intended to abandon the street railway system on expiration of the franchise in December, and if the company was interested in submitting an offer to provide bus service here.

Mr. Goward replied:

"I have written to W. G. Murrin, president of the company, explaining the situation and have sent a copy of your letter. I have no doubt that very shortly we shall be able to take the matter up definitely with the Mayor and Council."

TO SPEAK ON MONDAY

On Monday evening, at 564 Yates Street, T. Sims, recently returned from Spain, where he was attached to the International Brigade serving with the Mackenzie-Papineau Battalion, will speak. This is one of a series of meetings being held in order to raise funds for comforts for the Canadians in Spain.

MOST BAD BREATH BEGINS WITH THE TEETH!

● Yes, authorities say decaying food deposits, in hidden crevices between teeth, are the most common source of this social handicap—and of much tooth decay. That's why they advise Colgate's Dental Cream. Its special penetrating foam thoroughly cleans each hidden crevice. And a soft, grit-free ingredient safely polishes enamel, keeps teeth sparkling bright.

So brush teeth, gums, tongue with Colgate's at least twice daily. If not entirely satisfied, send the empty tube to Colgate's, Toronto, Ont. We will refund twice what you paid.

Garden Party Arranged by Scout Troop

Through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Palmer, a most successful garden party was held yesterday afternoon in their garden, York Place, Oak Bay, in aid of St. Mary's Rover troop and Cub packs. The net proceeds amounted to $55.

Archdeacon Nunns introduced Reeve R. R. Taylor, who opened the affair at 3 o'clock and gave a short talk on the aims of scouting, making special reference to the Chief Scout. Mrs. Taylor was presented with a beautiful bouquet by the sixer of the South Pack. The Scouts and Cubs joined in giving three hearty cheers for Mr. and Mrs. Palmer. After the ceremony of the flag-break, the Cub howl was given, led by the sixer of the North Pack.

Tea was served in the Summer house under the direction of Mrs. H. C. Corbett and Mrs. Wright. Mrs. McKechnie had charge of a home-cooking stall. Displays of signalling by the Scouts were of interest to the visitors, and many attractive games and competitions provided entertainment. The "treasure hunt" was won by Miss Joan Griffiths. Mr. H. C. Corbett won the men's prize in the nail-driving contest, and Mrs. C. R. Scharff was the winner of the ladies' prize.

Mrs. R. D. Harvey was the fortune teller for the afternoon, many of the guests, both young and old, enjoying their peeps into the future.

Weddings

CASILIO—GALE

The marriage of Phyllis, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Gale, 632 Manchester Road, and Mr. John Casilio, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. D. Casilio, 3069 Carroll Street, was solemnized in St. John's Church at 1.15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, Rev. G. R. V. Bolster officiating.

Mr. Gale gave his daughter away, and she wore a bolero frock of white silk net over taffeta, with a bouffant skirt of graduated bands of taffeta. Her veil of embroidered tulle was held in place by a bandeau of lace and orange blossoms and she also wore lace mittens and carried an arm bouquet of butterfly roses and white carnations tied with white and silver ribbon.

Mrs. A. Woollett, the matron of honor, wore a frock of pale pink net over taffeta with a matching embroidered bolero, and a cap of pink flowers under a short veil. She carried a bouquet of pink carnations and blue iris tied with pink chiffon. The bridegroom's sister, Miss Annetta Casilio, was the bridesmaid, in a frock of pale yellow taffeta with a ruffled skirt and short puff sleeves, who wore a bandeau of yellow flowers in her hair and carried a Colonial bouquet of yellow iris, pansies and pink rosebuds tied with yellow ribbon. Mr. Hiram Casilio supported his brother.

A reception was held later at the home of the bride's parents. An embroidered table cloth covered the refreshment table, which was centred with the wedding cake, and adorned with crystal vases holding pink and white roses. White carnations and pink schizanthus were used in decoration of the rooms. Mrs. Gale wore a navy blue bolero frock with a flowered bodice and matching accessories, and Mrs. Casilio, Sr., was also in blue. They both wore corsage bouquets of pink carnations and blue forget-me-nots.

After a honeymoon in Seattle and Tacoma, for which the bride left in a grey and white ensemble, topped with a light rust jigger coat, and a corsage bouquet of white carnations, Mr. and Mrs. Casilio will make their home at 2529 Wark Street. Mr. and Miss Casilio, Port Angeles, and Mr. and Mrs. A. Di Loreta, Tacoma, were guests at the wedding.

ENGLAND—WALLER

Rev. C. D. Clarke officiated at the marriage of Ellis Isabel, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Waller, Wilson Street, and Mr. Harold H. England, only son of Mr. and Mrs. D. H. England, Cook Street, which took place at 8 o'clock last evening in Victoria West United Church. Miss Irene Watson presided at the organ. The bride was given away by her father, and wore a navy blue bolero suit of silk trimmed with lighter blue, and a wide-brimmed navy hat trimmed with light blue and pink, and a corsage bouquet of pink rosebuds and pale blue delphiniums. Miss Laverne Waller was her sister's bridesmaid, in a navy blue frock of French lace worn with a white lace coatee and a large blue hat trimmed with pink flowers. Pink and white sweet peas and swansonia formed her corsage bouquet. Mr. Morran Waller was best man, and the usher was Mr. Ted Oldnall. The wedding party and relatives were entertained at their home by Mr. and Mrs. Waller after the service, where the floral decorations were carried out in pink and white. The wedding cake centred the supper table, standing between tall white tapers and vases of white rosebuds. After a honeymoon on the Island, Mr. and Mrs. England will make their home on Douglas Street. Among the numerous gifts were an electric coffee urn from Mr. R. Smith and the associates of the bridegroom on the staff of Plimley & Ritchie, Ltd., a silver flower basket from the teachers, officers and pupils of the Victoria West United Church Sunday School, and a silver-handled cake plate from the teachers and pupils of the primary class, of which the bride had been superintendent.

SCAFE—RIBBONS

The marriage was quietly solemnized on Wednesday afternoon in the presence of a few relatives and friends at the Registry Office, Victoria, between Patricia Marie, daughter of Mr. Albert Ribbons, Atkins Road, Langford, and the late Mrs. Ribbons, to Mr. David Austin Scafe, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Scafe, Langford. After the ceremony, luncheon was served to the bridal party and friends at the home of the bride's father. Mrs. J. Richards, an old friend of the family, presided at the table, which was decorated with bowls of beautiful roses. Mr. and Mrs. Scafe will make their home at Langford on the Island Highway.

Visiting at Fairbridge Farm School

Mrs. Oliver Coutts Lane, of London, England, who is making a tour of the North American Continent, arrived in Victoria a few days ago for a short visit, and today is being driven to the Fairbridge Farm School, Duncan, to see something of the enterprise before leaving tonight for the East.

All her life closely associated with philanthropic and social welfare projects, Mrs. Lane was greatly interested to hear that a branch of the Fairbridge Farm Schools had been established on Vancouver Island. She has given considerable study to various emigration schemes, and had already looked into some others in this country hoping to be able, on her return to the Old Land, to stimulate interest in any that are proving successful. In London her energies are particularly centred in Spurgeon's Orphanage, of the committee of which she is a member. She is also well posted about the work of the Barnardo Home, in this and other philanthropic interests following the tradition set by her father, the late John Coutts, J.P. He was a well-known worker in this field, being created a Freeman of the City of London in recognition of his endeavors to alleviate the lot of the underprivileged.

Mrs. Lane, who has been accompanied to the Coast by an old friend of many years' standing, Mrs. J. B. Mitchell, of Winnipeg, is also a member of the English-speaking Union in London, and has been interested in the activities of branches of this organization on this continent. P. B. Fowler, vice-chairman of the British Columbia committee of the Fairbridge Farm School, is acting as Mrs. Lane's host today. While in Victoria she and Mrs. Mitchell are staying at the Empress Hotel.

Girl Guide Notes

BROWNIE PACK

The Fifth Victoria North Brownie Pack was visited by Mrs. V. Pritchard and the mothers of the Brownies at their meeting on Friday afternoon at their headquarters, St. Paul's Church House. Margaret Ord, Lois Tait and Gwynneth Jones were enrolled by the brown owl, Mrs. Matheson. First-class badges were presented to Mavis Ockenden and Edith Benson, the former also receiving her third-year star. After the ceremonial of the Brownies' grand howl in honor of Mrs. Pritchard, refreshments were served.

VICTORIA NORTH DISTRICT

The first annual meeting of the Victoria North District, local association of Girl Guides, was held on Friday afternoon at St. Paul's Church House. Mrs. V. Pritchard, the district commissioner, was present and welcomed by Mrs. G. P. Clarke, the president, who, with Mrs. Lance Hall, secretary-treasurer, was re-elected by acclamation. Mrs. W. E. A. Barclay was named vice-president. Reports of the year's work were given by Mrs. O. Lownds, captain, and Mrs. R. P. Matheson, brown owl. Four guides had received the bronze medal for life-saving. Miss Lownds applied for a lieutenant's warrant for Miss Peggy Archer. Mrs. Barclay was appointed convener of a committee to arrange a home-cooking stall. Mrs. Pritchard gave a talk on camping. Tea was served by Mrs. H. Cresine, tawny owl.

EAST VICTORIA ASSOCIATION

The Local Association of Girl Guides, East Victoria district, will meet at the home of Mrs. Curtis Sampson, Newport Avenue, tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock to make final plans for the garden party to be held at her home on Saturday.

FIRST COLQUITZ COMPANY

To celebrate the sixth birthday of the First Colquitz Company of Girl Guides, a birthday party was held in the Strawberry Vale Institute Hall on Wednesday evening. Mrs. H. M. Archibald, the commissioner, who enrolled the Guides at the first ceremony, was an honored guest, and after supper gave an interesting talk on Guiding as she was privileged to see it in many countries while on a recent world tour. More than sixty guests sat down to supper, which was served by the members of the Guide Association and the Strawberry Vale Institute. A large birthday cake, which was made by Mrs. George Austin, president of the Guide Association, was cut by Mrs. Archibald. Among those present were Miss D. Stocken, captain of First Colquitz Company, with fifteen Guides and six Rangers; Tawney Owl Phyllis Sheffield and Six Brownies; also Arnold Wratten and J. Dentrith, Cubmasters, with ten Cubs, and Mrs. J. Dentrith, assistant Cubmistress for Tillicum. First Ranger service stars were presented to Dorothy Austin, Phyllis Sheffield and Maureen Evans, and a sixth-year Guide star was presented to Betty Austin, who was also appointed as the new company lieutenant. Other service stars presented were fifth year to Mona Watling, second year to Sophie Dickson, and first year to Fay Burnham. Third-year stars will be presented at the end of July to Molly Raper and Grace Sinclair. Brownies receiving service stars were Dierdrie Hitchcox, Coral Winters and Shirley Fennell. Following the singing of campfire songs, a hearty vote of appreciation was extended to Miss Stocken for her loyal and faithful service to the company; also to the ladies who served the supper. The singing of "Taps" concluded the evening.

CHEMAINUS PARTIES

Mrs. Donald Stevens, assisted by Mrs. Alexander, recently gave an enjoyable surprise miscellaneous shower for Miss Doris Hutson, nineteen guests attending. As Miss Hutson entered the room, a huge pink rose presented to her, unfolded the hidden gifts of those present. Cards followed, the winners at court whist being Mesdames W. Vater and E. Parsons. Supper was served from a long table, decorated in a color scheme of pink and white, with a wedding bell and bride's cake. Miss Hutson was also the guest of honor at a shower last week given by Mrs. A. Bennett. Her marriage will take place quietly in Victoria on June 22, to Mr. Gordon B. Westwood, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. I. B. Westwood, East Wellington. Miss Hutson will leave this week for Vancouver, where she will visit her mother, Mrs. F. Hutson, for the next ten days.

Resignation Is Received

The Esquimalt Rural Nursing Service has received the resignation of Miss Dora Wilkie, R.N., B.Sc., public health and school nurse. Miss Wilkie's fourth year in the district will end on August 31.

CARD PARTY HELD

SHAWNIGAN LAKE, June 11.—One of the most successful card parties held for some time took place in the S.L.A.A. Hall on Friday night under the auspices of the Women's Auxiliary to the Malahat branch of the Canadian Legion. Fifteen tables of cribbage, three of bridge, and three of five hundred were in progress. During the evening a successful contest with many useful and valuable prizes was held. Refreshments were served by the members. Winners at cards were, cribbage, first lady, Mrs. A. Wicks; first gentleman, Mr. S. Samuelson; bridge, first lady, Mrs. Muir; first gentleman, Mr. J. C. Rathbone; five hundred, first lady, Mrs. H. Flinn; first gentleman, Mr. A. Sutton.

Joint Recital By Students Ends Season

The monthly recital sponsored by the Victoria Music Teachers' Association was held on Friday evening, bringing to a close a most successful season of joint pupils' recitals.

The president thanked all those present for their co-operation during the year and announced that the first recital of the Fall term would be held on the second Friday in September.

The following interesting and varied programme showed a high standard of work being done in several of the local studios. Piano solo, "Holland" (Thompson), Donna Munroe; piano, "The Toy Drum" (Bamford), John Butcher; piano, "Tip-Toe" (Driver), Marjorie Jones; piano, "Tell Me Daphne" (Farnaby), Muriel Spragge; piano, "Albumleaf" (Grieg), Richard Roe; vocal, (a) "The Shepherd" (Arne), (b) "Gentle Youth" (Arne), Helen Hunter; piano, "Two Frogs," Grace Campbell, piano, "The Sad Doll" (Franck), Gladys Baxter; piano, "Celtic Song" (Dunhill), Irene Tait; piano, "Scherzo" (Muller), Viola Wain; piano, "April" (Tschaikowsky), Sylvie Sheldrick; piano, "Waltz" (Chopin), Jean Campbell, vocal (a) "O Mistress Mine" (Quilter) and (b) "The Shepherdess" (McMurrogh), John Bell; piano, (a) "Echoes of the Romantic Age" (Taylor), (b) "Catch Me If You Can" (Schumann), Elizabeth Angus; piano, (a) "Waltz" (Chopin), (b) "Alt Wien" (Godowsky), Barbara Hill; piano (a) "Allegro" (Beethoven), (b) "Little Shepherdess" (Niemann), Phyllis Hick.

TEAM IS ENTERTAINED

The Coach and Horses bowling team were entertained on Friday evening at the home of their captain, E. R. Heal, East Saanich Road, where Mrs. Heal and Mrs. W. Heal welcomed the guests. Cards and music were enjoyed throughout the evening. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. T. Beaney, Mr. and Mrs. D. Easler, Mr. and Mrs. H. Tatlor, Mr. and Mrs. A. Munn, Mrs. F. Toms and Mr. Rouell.

Summer Cottons That Look Smart

STYLE No. 3068—A cotton shirting shirtwaist frock of utter simplicity and becomingness. You'll welcome its cool V-neck and roomy bodice fulness. The slenderizing panel front skirt ends in two action-plaits that animate the flared hem for easy stride or for sports activities. An especially nice thing about this inexpensive dress is that it is suitable for town as well as for the country. Dotted sheer rayon in luggage with white polka-dots is fresh and lovely scheme with crisp white organdie ruffle trim at the neck and sleeves. Designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50 inches bust. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards of 39-inch material.

Style No. 2517—Is one of those Summer delights, whether you stay in town or spend your time in the country. It is made of dashing bordered linen. Nothing could be younger than the buttoned shoulders. Inverted tucks that nip at the waistline are an important detail. You'll adore it, too, in a peasant cotton print for resort. Arrange a matching kerchief as a hat and tie it under your chin in peasant fashion. To sew it, cut it out. One, two, three, it's finished! You've practically only side seams to join. You'll want to make several in different type cottons or linens. Designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20 years, 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38 inches bust. Size 16 requires 3¼ yards of 36-inch material with 2¼ yards of braid.

"THE NEW IMPROVED PALMOLIVE IS MY SOAP FROM NOW ON," says Dorothy Cunningham
lovely Montreal model

"Its extra mildness keeps my skin softer, smoother. And I love Palmolive's new fragrant perfume."

As smart as she's lovely, it hasn't taken Dot Cunningham long to learn about the new improved Palmolive. "I'll admit it," she says, "I've never been a regular Palmolive user, but I can't say that any more. From now on, it's my only toilet soap. I really don't know how a soap can be so mild and gentle, yet cleanse my skin so well. The new perfume is delightful, too . . . and now that Palmolive is harder it goes so much further."

Why not give your skin daily beauty treatments with this new improved Palmolive? See how its new delicate blending of soothing Olive and Palm Oils brings new freshness, new smoothness to your skin.

Enjoy its new mildness, its new, lovely perfume. See how its longer-lasting quality saves you money.

First only olive oil . . . Now, only Palmolive keeps the Quins' skins lovely

Palmolive is so good, so safe, so mild, it was selected exclusively by Dr. Dafoe, for the famous Dionne Quins. And you know, because they were premature babies, their skin has always been extremely tender and sensitive. Surely if Palmolive keeps the Quins' skins in smooth and perfectly healthy condition, it can keep all your skin lovely too. Get some today.

Plays and Players

"Fools for Scandal" Is Playing at Dominion

Hailed as the comedy event of the year, "Fools for Scandal," starring Carole Lombard and Fernand Gravet, will show for the last times tomorrow at the Dominion Theatre. A light and gay romance of London and Paris, produced and directed by Hollywood's ace comedy director, Mervyn LeRoy, it is said to reach a new high in entertainment.

No one needs to be told about Miss Lombard. Her recent comedy-triumphs, "True Confession" and "Nothing Sacred," speak for themselves. "Fools for Scandal" gives her the opportunity to further her success as a comedienne.

Gravet is the handsome, appealing young Franco-Belgian actor whom LeRoy discovered in Paris last year and brought to Hollywood under personal contract to star with Joan Blondell in the delightful comedy-romance, "The King and the Chorus Girl."

JACK BUCHANAN IS COMEDY STAR

British Actor Has Rare Opportunities to Show His Talents in "Smash and Grab"

"Smash and Grab," the brilliant new comedy which will start tomorrow at the Plaza Theatre, gives filmgoers the opportunity of once again seeing one of the most popular male stars on the British screen today—Jack Buchanan.

The film marks a departure from the star's more usual type of picture—he neither sings nor dances—but he appears in a role which provides him with splendid opportunities for exploiting his comedy talents.

The story is an original one by Tim Whelan, who is also responsible for the direction, which has been developed on quick-moving and hilarious lines, reaching a terrific climax fraught with suspense.

ATLAS TO SHOW "IN OLD CHICAGO"

Tyrone Power, Alice Faye and Don Ameche Starred in Outstanding Photoplay

"In Old Chicago," one of the outstanding photoplays of the season, will start tomorrow at the Atlas Theatre. It stars Tyrone Power, Alice Faye and Don Ameche.

It is an engrossing love story—telling of "the O'Learys against the world," early political intrigue in Chicago's civic politics, climaxed by the great fire that destroyed the growing city.

The great fire has been reproduced with startling realism. Actually the fire burned four square miles of buildings, destroyed $2,000,000 worth of property and killed 300 persons in the two days it raged.

COLUMBIA OFFERS 'MOUNTAIN MUSIC'

Bob Burns Has Lead in Comedy Film of Life in the Ozarks—Martha Raye Stars

Bob Burns chose the region which he has made famous on the radio and in his writings as the scene for his first starring vehicle, "Mountain Music," a comedy of love, shotgun weddings, feuding and other mountanic pastimes, which will open tomorrow at the Columbia Theatre.

The region is his native Ozarks, land of the hillbilly, squirrel rifle and razorback hog. Martha Raye, who has appeared with Burns in numerous pictures, is co-starred with him in "Mountain Music." Others in the cast are John Howard, Terry Walker, George Hayes, Jan Duggan, Fuzzy Knight, Rufe Davis and Spencer Charters.

AMATEUR TROUPE TO PERFORM AT CAPITOL

Radio fans who heard Major Bowes' broadcast of three weeks ago, when the "Four Brothers of Swing" were introduced, will have the opportunity of seeing them this coming Wednesday at the Capitol Theatre, when another of Major Bowes' units makes its appearance. Such a hit did these four brothers score that the major sent them all the way from New York to the Coast by plane to join this great unit.

In all, thre will be ten acts of big-time vaudeville, including the Top Hatters, sensational roller skating team; the Six Philharmonicas, harmonica wizards; Jacques Gokey, novelty pedestal dancer; Jean Rose, wizard of the keyboard, Ben Steen, sensational colored baritone, who won a recent broadcast, and whom the major calls "an amateur Paul Robeson"; Dave Barry, the man of a thousand faces, and who is also the master of ceremonies; Albert Hall, human piccolo; Pearl Robbins, toe-top dancer; Mildred Maye, popular blues singer; and last but not least the Four Brothers of Swing.

HALF-MINUTES IN HOLLYWOOD

"Sir, I have the honor to ask your wife's hand in marriage."

AMUSEMENTS

On the Screen

Atlas—"In Old Chicago," starring Don Ameche.

Capitol—The Ritz Brothers in "Kentucky Moonshine."

Columbia—"Mountain Music," starring Bob Burns.

Dominion—Carole Lombard in "Fools for Scandal."

Plaza — Jack Buchanan in "Smash and Grab."

MUSICAL PICTURE AT THE OAK BAY

"The Big Broadcast of 1938" Has Stellar Cast With W. C. Fields As Principal

Dorothy Lamour, exotic songstress who scored so sensationally in "High, Wide and Handsome," is featured in one of the leading feminine roles in Paramount's "The Big Broadcast of 1938," which will open tomorrow and show for three days only at the Oak Bay Theatre, with W. C. Fields and Martha Raye heading the stellar cast.

CUNNINGHAM IN TWO VICTORIES

NEW YORK, June 11 (AP).—A rain-soaked track thwarted Glenn Cunningham's bid for a new three-quarter-mile record today as he marked up his second victory of the afternoon in the feature event of the 140th games of the New York A.C.

Cunningham, who had run an exhibition half-mile at the New Jersey A.A.U. meet in East Orange earlier today, treated the crowd of 4,000 to another masterful performance as he raced to a two-yard victory over Howie Borck, Manhattan College's intercollegiate mile champion, in 3:3 6.9 seconds. Gene Venzke, of the New York A.C., was third, another two yards back.

The time was far slower than the world record of 3:00 4.

WON IN THREE MOVES

"First of all, my boy, realize that my time is limited. Secondly, say what you want. Thirdly, be short."

"Well, dad, firstly I do. Secondly I will. Thirdly, I am!"

Something to Smile About

Holiday Outfit Should Be Carefully Planned

The perfect holiday outfit should be planned to be interchangeable, thus producing the greatest variety of effects without making the wardrobe unreasonably large or difficult to keep in good condition, says an article in The Times (London).

For a short country holiday at this time of year there is an ideal five-piece suit, which comes in plain colorings in some lovely pastel shades and in many soft browns. It is composed of a tailored full-length coat with wide revers, patch pockets and pleated reefer back, held in by a wide stitched belt. With this goes a slim skirt with action pleats and a severely tailored jacket. These three are in soft, hand-woven tweeds. A round-necked sweater and collarless cardigan which exactly match in color make an alternative to be worn with the skirt. They are knitted in a plain stitch in the same yarn which is used for the tweed. An outfit of this kind gives the correct clothes for a journey, a race meeting, and even a game of golf.

A useful four-piece costume for numerous occasions is composed of a three-quarter-length swagger coat in tweed, with a slightly gored matching tweed skirt. With this is worn a shirt blouse in heavy rayon crepe. The same crepe makes an all-round pleated skirt which, worn with the blouse, gives the effect of a two-piece dress. A costume of this kind gives scope for attractive color combinations, such as cranberry-red tweed with navy crepe, and navy tweed with a soft dead rose shade of pink.

COLORED SUEDES

Plain colored tweed skirts are worn with round-necked collarless knitted sports jackets which fasten high up to the throat, in checks or pin stripes. These little coats may be worn alternatively with tailored jackets in the same material as the skirts, the costume being completed by a two-third-length boxy coat in a larger check or stripe than the cardigan.

Smart little suits of multi-colored striped or checked tweed in soft pastel tones are worn with skirts which either match or are in plain materials taking up one of the colors of the tweed. As an alternative the check skirts may have suede jackets with material revers, the ensemble being completed by top-coats of the tweed.

BLOUSES AND JACKETS

Navy blue and grey flannel suits, plain or pin striped, remain smart for country wear with sweaters of angora or lisle thread, and for town wear with frilly blouses of muslin and organdie. Shirt blouses in natural and strong clear colors which pack well are in coarse sacking weave linens. Others are cut with round collarless necklines finished with a flat stiched band and buttoned at the back.

Tailored woolen frocks may be worn with little fitting jackets of matching material, which makes an ensemble for town wear, or for country wear with bright colored suede jerkins. A dress of grey angora with flat pleats extending from shoulder to hem is held by a waist belt of bright green suede. One jacket is of grey angora with high broad revers and three slanting pockets on each side. The other is of grass-green suede with matching turban and gloves.

FOR EVENINGS

For holiday wear nothing is more practical than the new heavy silk and rayon jersey fabrics, as they do not crush and look equally well for formal gowns and for simple little dinner dresses. An ideal two-in-one evening dress is in this fabric in a somewhat bright shade of navy blue. The bodice is gauged with a square decolletage in front and a deep V at the back. It is molded to the figure at the waist and falls in straight lines to floor length. For formal wear it has a wide swathed sash of bright cyclamen jersey, with long ends forming a short double train. It may be transformed into a dinner gown by the addition of a brief bolero with short sleeves, of the same color and material as the dress, and a corselet belt in another bright shade.

The same basic dark blue dress could be again entirely changed by a little jacket sweater in hand-crocheted metal thread, fastened down the front with self-colored buttons, the narrow stand-up collar being finished with a small flat bow.

If another formal evening gown is required, nothing is more practical and effective than chiffon, either plain or printed in one of the new season's large splashy floral designs. Packing does not destroy the romantic glamor of these dresses, with their tiny bodices and full billowing skirts.

The house coat is nowadays an indispensable part of a holiday wardrobe. It can be adapted to almost any sort of occasion and looks right as a tea gown, cinema or cocktail dress, or as an informal dinner gown. Made in corded silk or heavy cloque crepes, these coats are cut on absolutely tailored lines, fitted to the waist with long tight sleeves. They are fastened from throat to knee by a zip fastener in a contrasting color.

"Kentucky Moonshine" Is Ritz Brothers' Vehicle

Barefoot boys with shoes on—that's the Ritz Brothers as be-whiskered mbuntaineers in "Kentucky Moonshine," their new 20th Century-Fox comedy now at the Capitol Theatre. In roles calling for them to go barefooted, the boys found their city-bred feet too sensitive, so rubber gloves were devised to protect them. Flesh-colored and molded to fit, the gloves defy detection even at close range.

Although the mad trio looks hillbilly, talks hillbilly and acts hillbily, the Brookyn accent betrays the hilarious masquerade. Marjorie Weaver is the boys' pretty accomplice in their plot to win fame on the radio, which scheme takes them to the Kentucky mountains.

Interpolated through the plot of "Kentucky Moonshine" is a romance between Tony Martin, popular radio screen crooner, and Miss Weaver, who has come a long way toward stardom since "Second Honeymoon."

MAXAM WINNER OF DERBY EVENT

DUNCAN, June 11.—The annual soap box Derby under the auspices of the Duncan Kinsmen Club was won Thursday by Billy Maxam, and Billy Maxam was winner of the event last year also and was presented with the J. K. McMillan Challenge Cup. His car was a cleverly constructed "Austin," which outdistanced all rivals.

Jimmy Maxam was winner of "B" class. David Plaskett came second and Herman Van Dyke third. Consolation prizes were awarded to J. Fielden, Peter Williams and Neil Green.

Because of a ruling that no entrant could win more than one major prize the well-built cars of the two Maxam boys could not compete for the best built car and that award went to David Plaskett, whose entry was a good one. Judges of the cars were C. T. Pitt and O. T. Smythe, the latter presenting the prizes after the meet. The cup for the best built cars was donated by Charles Stock.

SOFTBALL GAMES ARE ONE-SIDED

Cardinals Defeat Esquimalt, 59-2, And Adverts Trim Waude's, 42-8, in Women's League

Isa Milliken missed entering softball's mythical hall of fame Friday night when she pitched the Cardinals to an overwhelming 59-2 victory over the Esquimalt Club at Victoria West Park as play opened in the Women's Division of the City League. The young pitcher twirled hitless ball up until the ninth when she was nicked for a single and coupled with three errors by her teammates Esquimalt scored their two runs.

After going into a commanding lead in the first three innings, the Cardinals went on a rampage and drove across twenty tallies in the fourth and added another fourteen in the seventh. Too much experience was the difference between the two clubs.

Bob Whyte's Adverts ran roughshod over Bert Waude's in the other game at Central Park and chalked up a 42-8 triumph. The Adverts drove across eleven runs on fourteen hits in the second frame, five in the third, seven in the sixth, four in the next inning and then ten more in the eighth. Waude's got one in the fourth, three in the fifth and four in the eighth.

U.S. VETERANS TO RECEIVE PENSIONS

A bill was passed recently by the United States Senate and signed by President Roosevelt to the effect that all men who served in either the Spanish-American War, the Phillipine Insurrection or the Boxer uprising, will receive a pension of $60 a month when they reach the age of sixty-five years, according to information received here last night.

Some 23,000 veterans throughout the United States will be affected by the new law, the report stated. All veterans who come under the new ruling are asked to write to the Veterans' Bureau, Washington, D.C.

CHAPTER L

The Chief Constable had departed. Mr. Brook had departed. The contents of the safe had been removed. Sturrock's body had been removed. Inspector Boyce had retired from the scene. To all outward appearance it might have been any Sunday evening at Cole Lester with the butler off duty and William taking his place.

"Actually," as Algy said to Gay, "actually, my dear, the eye of the police is very much upon us. There's a young-fellow-my-lad hanging round the place to see that I don't take the Bentley out and forget to bring it back, and there's a smart police pup in the lane with a motor cycle all ready to follow me if I do. And William is going around like a cat on hot bricks looking at me out of the tail of his eye. I think he's thrilled at the idea of being at such close quarters with a murderer."

Gay stamped her foot and said, "I wish you wouldn't! I can't think why we go on talking about it, and I can't think why we're in this horrible room. It simply reeks of policemen.

Algy looked at her between half closed eyes. The room, purged of the police force, was pleasant enough. The inspector had well and truly tended the fire. There was a pleasant light from a tall lamp behind the chair. It fell on Gay, on the bright color which anger had brought to her cheeks, on the shadows under her eyes. He thought she had been crying. He thought that perhaps he would never see her again. And he had an overwhelming desire to bid this moment stay. He thought, "I love her," and thought how strange it was to feel this deep stab of triumph and pain. He thought, "She loves me, too," and the triumph rushed up in him like a singing flame and consumed the pain. But he hadn't moved. The big chair held a lazy, lounging young man looking with half closed eyes at an angry, pretty girl.

The sight exasperated Gay, who was only too eager to be exasperated. If she could be really furious with Algy, everything wouldn't hurt so much. It was when she was sorry for him when she wanted to put her arms round him and keep him safe, that the pain at her heart became almost unendurable. "Only you've got to endure it—you've got to—you've got to." And if they sent Algy to prison, she would have to bear it for years and years.

And then all at once such a little thing betrayed them both. Gay saw Algy looking at her. He didn't look lazy any more. His eyes were open and he was looking at her as if he loved her with all his heart, and as if he was saying good-bye—to love, to her, to everything. It was only for a moment, but that moment broke her anger and her pride and very nearly broke her heart. She came over to the chair and went down on her knees by it, leaning to him across the arm, her hands holding it, her voice breaking on his name.

"Algy!"

It was no good. They had lost their balances, and when you have lost your balance you catch at anything or anyone. These two caught at one another, held desperately together across the arm of the chair, kissed desperately as if there were no other time but this in which to kiss, to love, to cling together—a time quick with anguish, quick with joy.

It passed, but it left them in a new country. They drew back, still holding hands, looking at one another, and at this place to which they had come with stumbling, half unwilling feet. Double pain for both, and a double load to carry, double foreboding, double fear, and a frowning barrier between them and the double joy which would have made it all worth while.

Yet when Algy said, "I didn't mean to let you know," Gay knew just how unendurable that would have been.

She said so in a rush of words. "Horrible of you. I'd have died. I felt as if I was going to—when you said—they were going to arrest you."

"But, darling, you must have known that I did care"

"I didn't. How could I? You were being completely strong and silent. Oh, darling, wouldn't it be lovely if Sylvia had never been born, and if there weren't any police?"

Algy kissed her, and said he didn't follow.

"Dull," said Gay. "If Sylvia hadn't been born she wouldn't have married Francis Colesborough, and if she hadn't, I shouldn't have asked you to lend me your car, and we shouldn't have come hurtling down here in the middle of the night and be mixed up in any murder, and even if there had been, it wouldn't have mattered if there hadn't been any police."

In luxurious surrounding not far from the scene where Algy and Gay were finding comfort in their love for one another, Mr. Zero opened the door of his room and came out upon a dimly lighted corridor. The pile of the carpet was deep and Mr. Zero's movements were extremely quiet and controlled. The hour being a quarter before three in the morning, there was no one watching, no one saw Mr. Zero descend the stair and cross the dark hall below.

He came out of the hall into a room at the back of the house. There was no light there. He groped his way to the window and unlatched it. Setting down a small attache case which he had been holding, he put both hands to the window and raised the sash. He picked up the attache case, climbed out and drew the window gently down. Then he took a torch from his pocket and found his way round the house and down a drive. Coming out upon the road, he increased his pace and walked rapidly away into the dark.

About twenty minutes later he came to a deep pond lying a little way off the road. The water gleamed faintly under the open sky.

APPOINTMENT IS MANDATORY

No Further Legislation Concerning Wharfingers Is Contemplated

OTTAWA, June 11 (C.P.)—Appointment of wharfingers by the Transport Department is mandatory under the Harbors and Piers Act, Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Transport, said in the House of Commons today replying to a question from W. K. Esling (Conservative, Kootenay West). It has nothing to do with the National Harbor Board.

Mr. Esling wanted to know if wharfingers would be appointed for all wharfs not under the jurisdiction of the board.

J. S. Taylor (Independent, Nanaimo) wanted to know if there would be an amendment to the Harbors and Piers Act in view of the fact some wharves provided no revenue for a wharfinger. Mr. Howe said no further legislation was contemplated by the department this session.

What Today Means

"GEMINI"

If June 12 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., from 2:30 to 4:30 p.m., and from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. The danger periods are from 8:30 to 10:30 a.m., from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m., and from 9:30 to 11:30 p.m.

This ought to be an unusually pleasant day for you, due to favorable conditions that have a direct bearing upon your affairs. Many evidences of your popularity are likely to give you a sense of deep gratification. Your imagination is apt to be extremely active, so do not give it too free a rein. Be careful how freely you discuss other people's personal affairs, for trouble is due to originate this day from an excessive amount of gossiping. You might be due to get a good deal of pleasure through a very pleasant surprise. This is a good day not to appear anxious over the pros and cons of any debatable subject. Many a bitter argument can be easily started this day, without the slightest excuse. Married and engaged couples, as well as those into whose lives a great and abiding love has come, will do well not to be inquisitive about anything that they know in advance is likely to be very embarrassing.

If a woman and June 12 is your birthday, you probably are unassuming, sympathetic and very courageous. You may be carried away frequently by enthusiasm, and through this surge of emotion will originate your greatest mistakes. You are apt to be very industrious and must be careful not to overwork. You will outwit your enemies and overcome business difficulties if you have sufficient faith in your ability to do so. Although you can have faith in some people, it will be unwise not to exercise precautions so your trust will not be abused. As a business woman, artist, actress, sales agent, musician, educator or lecturer, your efforts are likely to be rewarded. There is every indication that you will marry well and happily.

The child born on June 12 is likely to have a great amount of intuition. Having a very sensitive nature, this youngster should be handled tactfully. Be careful that some latent talent is not left undeveloped, for by developing it, this youngster's future may be financially assured.

If a man and June 12 is your natal day, you have the power to overcome any difficulties on the road to success. You are most likely very diplomatic, hospitable and generous. You might achieve some brilliant results as a contact man, publicity or sales agent, actor, lawyer, chemist, inventor, writer, politician or artist.

MONDAY, JUNE 13

"GEMINI"

If June 13 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8:45 to 10:45 a.m., from 2:45 to 4:45 p.m., and from 7:45 to 9:45 p.m. The danger periods are from 6:45 to 8:45 a.m., from 5:45 to 7:45 p.m., and from 9:45 to 11:45 p.m.

With many favorable conditions prevailing this day, you likely will be protected against any misfortune which could interfere with your happiness. Circumstances over which you have no direct control may lead to your becoming better off financially before the day is over. By seeing and hearing things, you may be able to formulate some course of action or behavior that will save you from some future complications with relatives, friends or business associates. This is a good day to do more listening than talking, and to refrain from telling all you know. A desire to spend freely makes it advisable for you not to part with money too easily. Your wants may be many, but your actual personal requirements are apt to be comparatively few this day. Married and engaged couples, and those who feel the time is soon coming when they can announce their engagement, should remember that every person is entitled to his opinion.

If a woman and June 13 is your birthday, you must never try to rule your home or office with an iron hand if you want harmonious conditions to prevail. You are apt to find yourself in a position to wield a great influence over many people. You must keep in mind constantly that it takes a long time to make a tried and trusted friend, and that you can lose one in less than a minute. There are times when you should assert yourself, but the vitally important thing is to know when it is the right time to do so. Through social welfare, missionary, educational, artistic, musical, theatrical or a specialized line of commercial work you may reap a rich reward for consistent labor done cheerfully and with enthusiasm. Your married life probably will be a long happy romance.

The child born on June 13 is generally of the credulous type, easily imposed upon. This youngster ought to be encouraged to ask questions and to express an opinion whenever an opportunity presents itself. Children born on this date generally emerge from the battle of life with colors flying.

If a man and June 13 is your natal day, you must be broad-minded, cheerful and courageous to succeed. Through politics, theology, writing, publishing, selling, theatrical work, painting or promoting, riches and fame may unite to make you very happy.

HOW REGULAR PLAY WILL PREVENT THE CHILD FROM TIRING EASILY

When we were youngsters returning from school in the afternoon, it was our custom to get a slice of bread and butter covered with brown sugar, then go out to play until the hour of the evening meal. Today, while many parents give their youngsters food after school—milk, candy, bread and butter, a banana or orange—many other parents feel that it is unwise to give children food "between meals," and the youngster gets no food between lunch and dinner, or dinner and supper, whichever happens to be the daily routine. He is often then too tired to want or digest food.

Now, before the school age, or when youngsters are "picky" about food, it may be wise to not let them eat between meals, but a growing boy or girl who wishes to be outdoors playing after school should have some food to "play on." This little extra supply of food gives them the strength with which to play and the play actually uses up this extra food so that the child needs food again at the evening meal.

How is it known when a youngster needs food?

The food that gives energy with which to play is the starch or sugar foods. If there is not a normal amount of sugar in the blood there will be a feeling of weakness and tiredness. Play or exercise not only uses up sugar but manufactures lactic acid. The amount of lactic acid in the blood shows the amount or degree of fatigue or tiredness of the individual.

Now, what has play to do with fatigue and sugar or starch?

Drs. Frederic W. Schultz and Eleanor Blish, in American Journal of Children's Diseases, in investigating the use of sugar in children with an empty stomach, found in children who were weak that after eating sugar there was a great rise in the amount of sugar in the blood, whereas in children who were rugged or normal, the rise in blood sugar was not so great. That is, the rugged children did not need the sugar so much as there was not so much lactic acid in their blood. They did not get tired so soon.

The big point, however, discovered by these research workers was, "The child's ability to play or exercise for a longer time and to do more work with less production of lactic acid was more dependent on training" (playing regularly) than on the effect of eating the sugar. The influence of training was so marked that it overshadowed the amount of good done by the sugar."

CLOSE OF PLAY

"I must say you're a wonderfully young-looking man for seventy."

"But you should see my father. He's ninety-two and he's got twenty-five children."

"Why don't you inform the newspapers?"

"Not till I get the final score."

United States in Cup Victory Over British Net Team

Wins Four of Five Singles Matches for 5-2 Triumph in Wightman Cup Competition—Mrs. Helen Moody Defeats Kay Stammers in Three Sets—Britain Takes Doubles

WIMBLEDON, Eng., June 11 (AP).—The United States Wightman Cup team, paced by Helen Wills Moody, today gained its eighth consecutive victory in the international tennis series with Great Britain, winning three of the final day's four matches for a 5-2 triumph.

It was left to Mrs. Moody to drive home the clinching point. After a straight-set victory yesterday over Peggy Scriven to help the cup defenders to a 2-1 lead, she defeated left-handed Kay Stammers today, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3.

Before Helen took the court, Mrs. Sarah Fabyan, of Boston, had raised the score to 3-1 with a 5-7, 6-2, 6-3 conquest of Margot Lumb. Alice Marble, United States champion in 1936, made it 5-1 by defeating Miss Scriven, 6-3, 3-6, 6-0.

The British doubles combination of Evelyn Dearman and Joan Ingram then defeated Mrs. Moody and young Dorothy May Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., 6-2, 7-5, in the last match of the day and the series.

The United States victory brought the standing in the series, begun in 1923, to: United States 12, Great Britain 4.

After Mrs. Fabyan had turned back Margot Lumb, 5-7, 6-2, 6-3, Mrs. Moody took the court and defeated left-handed Kay Stammers, 6-2, 3-6, 6-3.

FIRST SINCE 1924

The second set of this match was the first the California veteran had lost in Wightman Cup competition since 1924. Yesterday she gained a straight-set decision over Peggy Scriven as the United States also won the doubles to take a 2-1 lead, Great Britain getting its lone points on Miss Stammers' victory over Alice Marble.

Mrs. Moody and Kay Stammers, winners of yesterday's singles matches, came onto the court chatting together and received a great ovation.

The point score:

Mrs. Moody	576 544 06	37—6
Miss Stammers	394 312 44	30—2

Miss Stammers won the second set, 6-3, to square the match.

The point score:

Mrs. Moody	242 424 242	26—3
Miss Stammers	414 146 424	30—6

Rallying from 15-40, Kay came back to score with two fine drives past Helen's backhand. Mrs. Moody then rallied herself to win the ninth game and the match from the courageous English miss, who held off two match points. On the final point, after the ball had been hit back and forth twenty-one times, Kay's net-cord shot just cleared the barrier, and Mrs. Moody, racing in, bashed the ball back into the corner of the court for the point that clinched the cup.

The point score:

Mrs. Moody	444 224 438	35—6
Miss Stammers	212 441 156	26—3

Saanich Schools in Track Meet at Beaver Lake

While proud parents and teachers watched, more than 150 youngsters from Tillicum, Cloverdale, Craigflower, Cedar Hill, McKenzie Avenue, Tolmie, Royal Oak, Strawberry Vale, Prospect Lake, Gordon Head, Keating, West Saanich and Saanichton Schools competed for the Grand Aggregate track and field cup at Beaver Lake, Friday. The cameraman climbed the diving tower at the lake edge to photograph some of the contestants nearing the finish of the 75-yard sprint for boys under fifteen. Tillicum School captured the trophy with a total of forty-one points.

CINCINNATI ROOKIE BLANKS BOSTON, 3-0 AFTER FINE DISPLAY

First Pitcher to Turn Trick Since 1934 and First Southpaw in Eight Years—Only Three Men Get as Far as First Base—Rain Interferes With Day's Important Series of Games

By The Canadian Press

Just when the sports writers were wondering what they'd write about in the big leagues Saturday, young Johnny Vandermeer, Cincinnati's twenty-three-year-old southpaw hurler, popped up with a no-hit, no-run performance as the Reds licked the Boston Bees, 3-0.

The six-foot, 190-pound boy from Jersey pitched himself right into baseball's hall of fame with the first nine-inning no-hitter in the National League since Daffy Dean turned the trick back in 1934. He was the first southpaw to do it since 1931.

Of the twenty-eight men that faced him, only three reached first base, all on walks. He retired the first nine men to face him, lost momentary control of his fast ball in the fourth and fifth, and then breezed in by finishing off the final thirteen Boston batters in a row. He fanned four.

Gene Moore, first up in the fourth inning, drew a walk, but was out when Johnny Cooney fouled to Lombardi and the catcher pegged to first to complete a double play.

In the fifth, Tony Cuccinello also drew a walk, but was picked off first base on Lombardi's fine throw a moment later. In the same frame, Gil English walked with two out; but "died" on first as Johnny Riddle grounded out.

Johnny was as surprised as anyone else. "Gee, I'd no idea of pitching a no-hitter," he told his mates.

HALTED BY RAIN

The St. Louis Cardinals put over two eighth inning runs, one of them Don Gutteridge's homer, to tie the league-leading New York Giants, 2-2, in a game called in the first of the ninth by rain.

The only other National Leaguer saw Bill Swift go the route for the first time this season and hit a homer with two aboard to give the Pittsburgh Pirates a 4-3 decision over the Philadelphia Phillies.

Only two games materialized on the American League front, as Cleveland's scheduled appearance at New York and Chicago's visit to Boston were postponed by rain.

The Detroit Tigers took their second straight victory of their series with Washington today, 7-2. Lengthy hitting and Roxie Lawson's pitching were the major factors in the win.

The Philadelphia Athletics came from behind to score a ninth-inning 5-4 victory over the St. Louis Browns in the other game.

Wests and Navy Play Wednesday In Cup-Tie Game

THE local final of The Province Cup football series will be held Wednesday evening at 6 o'clock at the Royal Athletic Park, with Victoria West, First Division champions, facing the Navy, of the Wednesday League, Secretary Pat Mulcahy announced yesterday. Bill Cull will handle the whistle. The greenshirts advanced in this series by eliminating Young Liberals, of the Intermediate League, while the sailors came through with a decision over Victoria City.

Big Daily Double Pays Off $3,551 At Canadian Park

TORONTO, June 11 (CP). — Three persons who combined Tea Jester and Kissin' Bug in the daily double at Long Branch races today, received $3,551.65 for their $2 investment. The pay-off was the biggest of the Ontario Spring racing season and is believed to be a record here since the $2 duet was inaugurated.

In the mutuels, Tea Jester, winner of the first race, paid $102.15 for $2, and Kissing Bug, victor in the second, returned $48.15.

Victoria Boy Captures Vancouver Island Title

Peter Holding Wins Colonist Cup in Fourth Annual Soap Box Derby—Large Crowd Witnesses Popular Event—Chief of Police Presents Prizes

Piloting his trim model racing car over the finishing line in first place, Peter Holding, Victoria youngster, yesterday won the coveted Colonist Cup, symbolic of the Vancouver Island championship, in the fourth annual Soap Box Derby, held on the Yates Street hill.

The champion really had a big day, and in addition to lifting the major award, carried off the city championship. He faced Chief of Police John A. McLellan, the official starter, three times, and in each instance had the speed of the field.

Three model racing machines competed in the Vancouver Island championship, with Peter Holding, Victoria; Bill Maxan, Duncan, and Jack Freethy, Nanaimo, at the wheels. Closely bunched as they showed over the brow of the hill, the cars presented quite a sight for the many spectators who lined both sides of the course and gathered at the finishing line. Slowly, but surely, the local driver moved to the front, and kept this position to the finish. The Duncan entry provided good opposition for the Victorian, with the Nanaimo boy finishing third.

GOOD FINISHES

Five heats, two semi-final heats, city and Vancouver Island finals were run off during the afternoon, with twenty-two youngsters piloting their machines with the skill and grace of veterans. Finishes in all events were close, and judging by the applause of the onlookers they enjoyed the races equally as much as the competitors.

The Derby was sponsored by the Victoria Kinsmen Club. Blue-coated motorcycle police officers kept the course clear for the competitors, and other officers handled the large crowd.

Chief of Police John A. McLellan, who acted in the capacity of official starter, presented the many handsome trophies immediately following the Vancouver Island championship event. Herb Sabiston, president of the Victoria Kinsmen Club, spoke briefly before asking Chief J. A. McLellan to make the presentations.

SUMMARY

City Championship—1, Peter Holding.

Don Budge Wins French Net Title In Straight Sets

AUTEUIL, France, June 11 (AP).—Don Budge, United States Davis Cup ace, added the French hard courts championship to his British, American and Australian titles today when he defeated Roderich Menzel of Czechoslovakia, 6-3, 6-2, 6-4.

Seventh foreigner to win the crown since 1891, he replaced Germany's Henner Henkel as champion. The German did not defend his title.

THIRD FIGHT IN THE AIR

Possibility of Bout in September for Louis and Schmeling

SPECULATOR, N.Y., June 11 (AP).—There is a possibility Max Schmeling and Joe Louis may meet for a third time in one of the New York ball parks early in September.

Mike Jacobs, who is staging the June 22 heavyweight title tilt between Schmeling and the "Brown Bomber" champion, visited the German's camp today and announced both principals have agreed to a third meeting should this month's battle go the fifteen-round limit.

"It's entirely up to me," said Jacobs. "If the coming bout goes to a decision and is a close sensational battle, my plan now is to throw them against each other in September. If the fight is decided by a knockout or is one-sided and not a crowd pleaser, I will pit the winner against Max Baer in September."

THIRTY WILL COMPETE FOR CITY HONORS

Championship Golf Meet to Open Tomorrow at Oak Bay Course

With thirty shotmakers of various handicaps entered, play in the annual women's city golf championship gets under way tomorrow afternoon at the Oak Bay course. The club swingers will be facing the starter in the eighteen-hole qualifying round, and Miss Mary Mackenzie-Grieve, of Uplands Club, champion for the past two years, will be on hand in defence of her title. If the titleholder makes it three in succession it will be her fourth championship success, as she first won the honors at Colwood some years ago.

Entered also is Mrs. James McIlraith, of Uplands and Ardmore Clubs, who was the runner-up last, losing out to the titlist on the eighteenth green, one up, after a great battle. One of the favorites will be none other than Mrs. E. Jackson, the 1937 British Columbia champion, and who has held the city crown in former years. Mrs. H. G. Mackenzie, Mrs. Art Dowell, Mrs. A. C. Stickley and Miss Peggy Hodgson are others who will have to be carefully watched, as all are capable of upsetting the dope any time out.

Draw and starting times follow:

MONDAY'S DRAW

12:05—Mrs. Jackson and Miss Peggy Hodgson.

12:10—Mrs. H. G. MacKenzie and Mrs. Hew Paterson.

ST. ANDREWS IN TRIUMPH

Scots Blank Vancouver Services in Dominion Cup Soccer, 2-0

VANCOUVER, June 11 (CP).—Vancouver St. Andrews scored two second-half goals today, for a 2-0 victory over Vancouver Services and became the first team to gain the semi-final round in the British Columbia section of the Dominion soccer series.

The other three teams who will enter the semi-final are not yet decided.

After a scoreless opening half, "Geegee" Stephens opened the scoring for St. Andrews eighteen minutes after the turnover. Hap Smith added the other goal at the twenty-five-minute mark.

In a regular Mainland League game, North Shore United rode roughshod over Vancouver Radials for an 8-3 victory.

Radials held their own in the first half. Johnson and McKibben, of Radials, equalled two first-half North Shore goals by Larson and ended the first half tied at 2-2.

They faded badly in the second half, however. Spencer scored twice and Harvey, Liptrott, Larson and McManus scored for North Shore before Johnson counted for Radials' only other goal.

Cricket Elevens Play Wednesday

Midweek cricketers will continue their Payne Cup series Wednesday at Beacon Hill Park, with Hudson's Bay, present holders of the silverware, opposing the Five C's. The match will get under way at 2:30 o'clock.

Viktor Barna and Bellak Will Play Here Wednesday Evening

KINGS of the table tennis world, Viktor Barna, world's champion, and Laszlo Bellak, runner-up and United States national champion, will be seen in action at the Crystal Garden on Wednesday evening. Details in connection with their visit here have been completed, and judging by the interest being displayed by local fans, the "sold out" sign will be hung up before the show gets under way at 8 o'clock. The programme for the show was announced last night by Bob Crombie, in charge of arrangements, as follows: Singles, Viktor Barna vs. Wilmott Browne-Cave; Laszlo Bellak vs. Ab Renfrew. Doubles, Viktor Barna and Victor Tully vs. Laszlo Bellak and Bob Crombie. Singles, Viktor Barna vs. Laszlo Bellak. Exhibition of trick shots, with Bellak, admitted by critics to be the showman of the tennis world, holding the spotlight. Plans have also been made to have a demonstration of how the game was played away back in the 80's.

ESQUIMALT ELIMINATES CITY FROM CUP SERIES

Nip Sage and Jimmy Worswick Score Tallies in Team's Victory Over Redshirts in Cup-Tie Fixture—Wyatt Misses Two Penalty Shots for City—Winners Proved Better Team

Clicking as a team together in every department much better than the opposition, Dave Scott's Esquimalt football eleven advanced another step in the Dominion Challenge Cup series by hurdling Victoria City, yesterday afternoon, at the Royal Athletic Park, by scoring a 2-0 victory in the second round of the local play-downs. Victors last week over the fast-moving Victoria West team, Victoria City were figured in many quarters to combine their way past the Dockers, but they never looked like it at any time yesterday.

Esquimalt's front line worked better than the disorganized City forwards, while their halves fed more accurately and broke up cleverly when called upon. The Dockers' defence was also reliable, their kicking being stronger, while Morry Hornsby between the uprights turned in a fine performance, taking care of high and low drives with a sure pair of hands. His anticipation of crosses and lobs into the goal mouth was right up to the standard. On the other hand, several weak links were noticed in the City ranks, especially the front line, which failed to function to advantage all afternoon.

MISSES PENALTY

The turning point of the match came in the first ten minutes when the City failed to score on a penalty, George Wyatt driving the ball into the waiting arms of Hornsby. From then on Esquimalt played the better ball in the first half and deserved the goals they garnered. In the early minutes a bad-bouncing ball eluded Hornsby, but it luckily missed the post. On a quick Esquimalt rush, Sage was sent through by Bell, but the clever inside right missed the far upright.

The City then went away on a raid which ended in tough luck for Harry Barber, for the young left winger hit the crossbar with a hard drive. Seconds later the referee whistled a penalty against the goalie for elbowing Barber. Wyatt, assigned to the spot kick, drove the leather straight at Hornsby. Wyatt rushed in for the rebound, but shot well wide of the net. Esquimalt held the upper hand after this and Tom Watt was sent through by Leggett, but the veteran centre drove the ball directly at Goalie Rowe.

Nip Sage fired home the first goal at the seventeen-minute mark when he raced up the right wing all by himself, beat Cann, cut in towards the goal and caught the far corner of the net with a low drive, well out of Rowe's reach. Watt fired one over the bar on the next Esquimalt rush, and then Rowe slapped out Worswick's bouncing shot after Bell had crossed beautifully from the wing.

After Cliff Robbins had tested Hornsby with a long, low drive, Esquimalt scored again. Jimmy Hay sent the ball down the right wing to Bell, who crossed over from near the line. Worswick crashed the ball at Rowe and it bounded into the air, but the Esquimalt inside right rushed in and breasted the ball to the back of the goal before Rowe could regain his feet. It was still 2-0 at halftime.

The City shifted their line-up around as the second half opened. Wyatt went to fullback and McConnell to the half line, while Cliff Robbins was ordered to inside right. Rowe made a fine stop from Worswick and then intercepted Bell's great cross as Tommy Watt raced in for a header. Cliff Robbins had a great chance from Tony Hope, but missed with the goal staring him in the face.

As play continued at a comparatively ragged pace, a second penalty was called against Esquimalt, this time Doug Laird tossing a heavy body charge at Bob Preston as he was going through for what looked like a sure goal. Again Wyatt drove the ball a little to the left of the goalie, who had no trouble shifting a little to make the save. Right after Hornsby pulled off a brilliant save of Preston's hard rising shot ticketed for the corner.

Play slowed up under the warm sun, with Esquimalt contented with their two-goal margin and the City vainly trying to penetrate a strong half line and a reliable defence. McBride came into the play for Tony Hope ten minutes from time, and before the finish Gornall replaced Preston. These changes had little effect on City attacks, which lacked polish all afternoon.

Esquimalt will now meet Vancouver Excelsiors on the Mainland in the next round.

Esquimalt — Hornsby, J. Watt, Laird, Hay, McBay, Bell, Sage, T. Watt, Worswick and Cook.

Start of Class "B" Riders in Colonist Race

Heavy Schedule of Games Lined Up This Week For Local Nines

Softballers will continue their bids for sectional honors this week with another heavy schedule lined up. Forty-three games, providing action twice during the week for all clubs, are announced by local officials.

Standings released by Alf Longley, assistant secretary, indicate keen races for the championships in all sections, with the senior section nines being well bunched.

Cameron Lumber is still on top of the "A" Section, with a half-game lead over Burns & Co. Victoria Longshoremen are in third position, with the Hollywood Club nine one step lower down.

Bruce Lowe's red-shirted Colwood Wood boys are setting the pace in the "B" Section, with nine wins and one defeat. Emsco and Young Liberals are bracketed in second place each with six victories and four setbacks.

GARRISON IN FINE WIN AT HEALS RANGE

Work Point Marksmen Top Field in Annual Gordon Trophy Shoot

Crack marksmen from the Esquimalt Garrison yesterday retained the coveted Gordon Trophy, symbolic of the team match championship of the Victoria and District Military Rifle Association, when they posted top scores in the annual competition at Heals Range. The Permanent Force rifle shots scored 1,072 points. Canadian Scottish finished in second place with 1,036, while the Fifth (B.C.) Coast Brigade (R.C.A.) was third with 984.

S.M.I. W. H. "Billy" Wood, of the winning Garrison squad, topped the individual scores with 142 out of a possible 150. The competition was fired over the 200, 500 and 600-yard ranges.

League Matches—

Incogs, 119; Albions, 47.

Five C's, 127 for three wickets; Victoria, 43.

Friendly Match—

University School, 82 for nine wickets; Shawnigan Lake School, 80.

Registering impressive victories in yesterday's league matches, Incogs and Five C's cricketers moved into a two-way tie for first place in the Victoria and District Cricket Association standings.

Playing on their home pitch at Macdonald Park, Victoria batted feebly against the bowling of Jack Payne and J. Hepworth, Five C's trundlers, and were all out for the small total of forty-three runs. C. Jones and E. Robbins just reached the double-figure bracket with scores of eleven and ten, respectively.

Five C's attacked the Victoria bowling from the start, and the score mounted rapidly. A. Griffin and Eric Quainton opened for the winners, the former being out l.b.w. after putting on five runs.

George Payne, young churchmen's batsman, joined Quainton and the pair formed a strong, free-hitting combination. They punished the offerings of Victoria's trundlers and no less than six bowlers were called into action in a futile attempt to halt the onslaught. Quainton put on forty-one runs, and Payne contributed a well-played sixty-three before being caught by Sparks. The latter hit two sixes and seven fours in his splendid innings.

Hepworth and J. Payne bowled unchanged for the winners, the former taking six wickets for twenty-two runs, and the latter four for seventeen.

INCOGS WIN

Dismissing the Albions for forty-seven runs and replying with 119, Incogs scored a one-sided victory at Beacon Hill Park. Batting first, Albions found the bowling of Reg and Godfrey Wenman very troublesome, and runs hard to get. No less than five of the losing batsmen retired without making any runs. Pat Freeman, young cricketer, proved to be the only member of the Albions to solve the trundling and carried his bat after putting on twenty-three of the forty-seven runs.

Poyntz and Reg Wenman, Incog's first wicket, bated strongly, Wenman retiring after contributing twenty-six runs. Tisdall added twenty-seven to the Incogs' total and three other bats reached double figures.

Reg Wenman dismissed six Albions for fifteen runs, and his brother, Godfrey, accounted for three wickets for twenty-nine runs. Smith was the most effective trundler for the losers, taking four for twenty-seven.

DEFEAT SHAWNIGAN

Playing at the University School grounds the home side defeated visiting Shawnigan Lake School cricketers by one wicket. The visitors batted first and scored eighty runs. University School replied with eighty-two for the loss of nine wickets.

Bowling for the losers, Cooper took six wickets for thirty-four runs, and Newton three for forty-four. Huff, University School trundler, had the fine analysis of five for twenty-two. Scores.

AUSTRALIANS LOSE THREE WICKETS FOR 138 RUNS

Open Poorly After England Makes 658 For New Test Mark

Don Bradman Among First Three Batsmen Dismissed When Caught After Scoring 51 Runs —Record Beaten by 22 Runs—Edward Paynter Bats 216 for Home Eleven

NOTTINGHAM, England, June 11 (P).—English and Australian cricketers prepared for the third day's play of the initial match in their five-game test series with England well in the lead. After declaring with a record-breaking total of 658 runs for eight wickets, the home team had disposed of three Antipodeans for 138 runs when play closed Saturday.

A huge crowd of more than 35,000 at Trent Bridge saw long-standing records toppled as English hitters clouted the cream of Australia's bowling array to all parts of the field. In making 658 runs, the Mother Country beat by twenty-two runs the highest total ever made by an English team against the Aussies. At Sydney in the 1928-29 matches England scored 636.

BRILLIANT STAND

Batting honors went to thirty-six-year-old Edward Paynter, of Lancashire. A brilliant 216 not out put him at the top of English batsmen in Anglo-Australian tests in England. In three hours at the wickets his high score, thirty-three runs better than Philip Mead's innings at the Oval in 1921, included one six, one five and twenty-six fours.

For the first time four individual centuries were recorded in an innings, seeting another mark. In addition to Paynter's sparkling effort, C. J. Barnett compiled 126 runs, Denis Compton 102 and Leonard Hutton 100.

The latter pair joined the select band of Old Countrymen who have hit the three-figure mark in test debuts with Australia. Compton, twenty-year-old Middlesex star, is the youngest player ever to perform the feat.

Two wicket partnership records also went by the boards, while the size of the crowd at Saturday's play set a less notable entry for attendance figures.

It was an auspicious start for Wally Hammond's first captaincy. For the major part of two days the Englishmen kept their opponents leather-hunting in earnest. Don Bradman brought all the force of his bowling talent to bear, but it got nowhere on a perfect wicket. E. L. McCormick's lightning-like offerings met with scant respect, and the same can be said for the Australian spin-bowling battery of L. O'B. Fleetwood-Smith, Frank Ward and W. J. O'Reilly. None of them was able to put any appreciable turn on the ball.

OPENS POORLY

Australia started poorly when J. H. Fingleton was dismissed for nine with only thirty-four runs on the board. W. A. Brown and Bradman carried the total to 111, when the Aussie skipper was caught behind the wicket off Reginald Sinfield for a well-played 51 that included five fours.

Competitors in Fourth Soap Box Derby

There were only four contenders with a title chance when the surviving field of sixty began the last round, after Henry Picard, the Hershey (Pa.) star, had fallen abruptly from the pace-making position with a third-round 77.

Besides Metz and Guldahl, the quartette of potential winners included long-hitting Jimmie Hines, Metropolitan New York open champion, and Emery Zimmerman, the slender twenty-eight-year-old "dark horse" from Portland, Ore., but the pressure quickly caught up with and disposed of all but the champion.

Hines folded quickly and wound up with an 83 for a total of 297. Zimmerman hung on longer, showing his gameness under fire, but the youngster from the Pacific Northwest finally skidded to a 78 for a total of 294, ten strokes behind the winner.

OVERTAKES LEADERS

Meanwhile Guldahl, having rated himself exactly four strokes off the pace for three successive rounds, with par under control and his best shots mustered to give it a beating if necessary, overtook Hines on the second hole of his final round. He caught up with Metz at the fifth and also shook off Zimmerman's challenge.

The issue, to all intents and purposes, was decided on the fourth, fifth and sixth holes. In that short stretch Guldahl picked up five strokes on the faltering Metz and three on Hines. The champion shot 4-4-2 on these holes against par of 4-5-3. Big Ralph Cooly dropped putts of fifteen and nine feet for his birdies on the fifth and sixth.

Guldahl went on to turn in 34, one under par. He had picked up no less than seven strokes on both Metz and Hines and four on Zimmerman. From there on only a crackup by the champion himself could affect the outcome. He never displayed the slightest trace of even bending under the pressure as a swarming crowd of nearly 10,000 spectators saw him march through a shower of rain to victory.

Metz, whose fifty-four-hole total of 211 equaled the championship record, had a two-stroke margin of second-place safety with his 290 total. Trailing him, in a tie for third place at 292, were Tony Penna, of Dayton, O., who came through with a last-round 68 to cut himself a bigger slice of the money than he expected, and Harry Cooper, the hard-luck king. Cooper finished with 71 for 292, after blowing his chances with a third-round 76.

ZIMMERMAN FIFTH

There was another two-way tie for fifth place, between Emery Zimmerman and Byron Nelson, of Reading, Pa., at 294 each. Zimmerman soared to a final 78 after three fine previous rounds of 72, 71 and 73. Nelson, never able to shake off completely the effect of a nine on his first-round card, shot 74 and 72 today.

Picard's attack of putting jitters on the third round put him out of the running after starting the final day's play in possession of a one-stroke lead over Metz, 140 to 141. The Hershey (Pa.) ace three-putted the first two greens of his third round, posted 77 and 78 for his last two rounds and totaled 295. This left him in a three-way tie for seventh place, with Paul Runyan and Frank Moore, both from New York's suburban Westchester.

KEN BLACK STILL LEADING GOLFER

VANCOUVER, June 11 (P).—Ken Black, of the Shaughnessy Golf Club, retained his Vancouver City amateur championship today, touring the last eighteen holes of Marine Drive course in 70, two under par, for a thirty-six-hole total of 138.

Black toured the morning round in 68, three above Fred Wright, who turned in a 65 but blew up in the afternoon round.

Y.M.C.A. Athletes Open Handicap Events at High School Ground

First of a series of Summer track handicaps under the sponsorship of the Y.M.C.A., was held Saturday afternoon in the Victoria High School grounds. The series, under the supervision of John Baxter, are open to any Victoria boy or girl. By a system of handicaps they are designed to provide stiff competition for athletes between meets and to give beginners a chance to enter the win column.

100 Yards, for men—1, Paul Rowe (scr.); 2, Arnold Masters (8 yds.), 3, Charles Cunningham (9 yds.).

100 Yards, for women — 1, Lila Crowther (6 yds.); 2, Barbara McKay (scr.), 3, Darlaine Woodburn, (2 yds.).

440 Yards, for men — 1, Bill Thompson (20 yds.), 2, Chuck Cunningham (15 yds.); 3, Ralph Shephard (10 yds.).

Women's High Jump — Darlaine Woodburn and Anna Peden (4 ft., 6 1-2 ins.); Barbara McKay and Lila Crowther, tied for third.

Men's High Jump — 1, Norman Willis (5 ft. 4 ins.); 2, Bill Thompson; 3, Harry Clark.

Events listed for Saturday afternoon, June 18, will include 220 and 880-yard, shot-put, discus, and broad jump for men, with 110-yard and broad jump features for women.

In preparation for the coming Junior Championship and Women's meet to be held at Powell River, and the Police meet in Vancouver on the same day, workouts will be held every Tuesday and Thursday evenings, starting at 6.15, and on Saturdays at 2.30 p.m.

Officials participating in Saturday's meet were: Vivian Shoemaker, starter; Nelson Hepburn and Archie McKinnon, judges; John Baxter, official handicapper.

JUNIORS TO BE COACHED AGAIN

Young Tennis Players to Be Given Instructions by Vancouver Island League

Completion of plans for the 1938 junior tennis season was effected at a recent meeting of the Vancouver Island Tennis League executive with the selection of Terry Peers as coach and the drafting of coaching schedules for entrants under eighteen years of age.

With the co-operation of the Provincial Department of Recreation and Physical Training, the league this year plans to intensify junior instructions and if possible provide lessons for every entrant once a week or every ten days at the outside. At the end of the schedule the season will be wound up with a divisional tournament.

According to present plans Peers will begin lessons at the start of the school holiday season. Entrants are requested to watch for the coaching schedule in The Colonist. Any Victoria boy or girl under eighteen on January 1, 1938, is eligible and should record their entry with the secretary of the tennis league, 618 Pandora Avenue, before June 23.

Classes will be held on the grass courts of the Victoria Lawn Tennis Club, the executive announced.

Resignation of Stanley Holden as secretary was announced during the meeting and Miss Harriet Douall was appointed to fill the vacancy.

MANY ATTRACTIONS FOR VACATIONISTS AT COWICHAN BAY

Splendid Fishing to Be Had at Seaside Resort Close to Victoria—Good Accommodation in Beautiful Surroundings—Lovely Drives to Be Enjoyed in Vicinity

BARELY forty miles from Victoria lies Cowichan Bay, a beautiful sheet of inland sea on the Island Highway. As the road dips down to sea level, a glorious expanse of water stretches out before the eye, the green and mountainous side of Tzouhalem opposite and the long flats that form the delta of two rivers emptying into the bay.

Cowichan Bay claims much attention both as a residential resort and as a commercial centre. Here a branch of the C.N.R. comes down from Lake Cowichan, carrying trainloads of logs, and trucks bring timber from the hills to dump into the waters at the west end of the bay. Here, too, are wharves for the distribution of oil, serving the districts to the north and south.

But to most visitors it is through sheer natural beauty that Cowichan Bay makes most appeal. At the foot of the hill on the Island Highway stand two excellent hotels sharing an outlook across the water that is unequalled anywhere.

Fishing is one of the major attractions that has made Cowichan Bay famous throughout the Island, including trolling for salmon and grilse and, at certain times of the year, grand sport may be had with a fly. In addition to this, there is fresh water fishing both up the Cowichan and Koksilah Rivers. Tennis courts are within a few miles of Cowichan Bay, while the golf links at Duncan nearby are gaining a growing reputation as one of the sportiest courses north of Colwood.

Added to these sports, which are easily accessible within reach of the bay, is the fact that Cowichan Bay is the centre for miles of delightful drives. Inland from the Island Highway lies the district of South Cowichan, spread along the Koksilah River Valley to the distant mountains. Excellent roads run for miles through well-kept farming country until they peter out to mere trails that pierce the hills and cry aloud for exploration on foot or on horseback.

HISTORICAL INTEREST

For those who enjoy delving into the past of a people, there is much historical interest to be found in the vicinity of Cowichan Bay. The Cowichan Valley boasts one of the oldest tribes of Indians on Vancouver Island. Within a short distance of the bay are are to be found relics of the days of their earlier might before smallpox and the ravages of similar ills brought by the white man decimated their ranks. Still living on the reservations are men and women who can tell stories of the days before the white man came, when tribal law ruled the land and the tribe that relaxed its vigilance and warlike strength was doomed. Near the foot of the Tzouhalem mountain, close to the head of the bay, is the grave of Chief Sull-a-malt, a great Indian warrior, about whose name many strange tales are woven.

There is an old deserted stone church, high above the flats on a little hill. Many are the reasons, superstitious and otherwise, offered in explanations of the fact that it has stood vacant ever since it was built.

COWICHAN INN ATTRACTS MANY

Excellent Accommodation Found in Old Country Style At Cowichan Camp

The Cowichan Inn, right on the waterfront of Cowichan Bay and commanding a magnificent view of the water, is characterized by an air of old-world charm with the highest standards of comfort and convenience. The lover of antique furniture will find here gems from a really fine collection, adding distinction and beauty, while modern conveniences are installed throughout.

Exceptionally fine home cooking is offered, with a dining-room that is large and comfortable. In fine weather meals are served on the deep veranda that overlooks the water. An up-to-date coffee shop, with counter service, is maintained in conjunction with the hotel.

In the Cowichan Camp, a few hundred yards down the highway, the visiting fisherman will find everything that he needs. The building is constructed out over the water and consists of a number of small bedrooms, opening off a large furnished sitting-room where non-fishing members of the party may pass the time comfortably while the sportsmen are out on the bay. A community kitchen is fitted with every convenience, there being electricity, hot and cold showers and modern plumbing throughout the building.

GOOD START

A crochety Yorkshire farmer had a dispute with his neighbor, and went to his solicitor about it.

"Aw want thee to write a letter," he said, "and tell 'im that all this nonsense 'as got to stop."

"Very well," said the solicitor, "and what do you want me to say?"

"Just tell 'im," replied the farmer, "that 'e's the blackest, low-downest, lyin'est thievin' scoundrel on earth, and then work it oop a bit until tha feels tha can say summat really rude to 'im."

BUENA VISTA IS VERY WELL KNOWN

Long Established Hotel at Cowichan Bay Has Reputation for Comfort And Hospitality

Splendid accommodation awaits the visitor to Cowichan Bay, no matter whether it is a stay of a few hours or a matter of weeks. For years the Buena Vista Hotel has been a familiar landmark on the highway. Since the old days when the annual regatta brought visitors from all points and excursion boats lay beside the wharf, the hotel has been noted for comfort and hospitality.

While enjoying a long-established reputation, no effort has been spared in keeping the hotel modern and up to date in every respect. With fishing as one of the major attractions of Cowichan Bay, the management is in a position to give authoritative information to fishermen, with boats available from the hotel boathouse.

Delicious luncheons and dinners are also featured.

RARE IMPRUDENCE

Mice in a London house drank some beer which had been spilt on the floor. We hear that one reckless little animal paused in its potations to sneer at a vegetarian and teetotal cat making apologetically for its saucer of milk.

HEADQUARTERS FOR FISHING IN BAY

Forming an ideal headquarters for fishermen at Cowichan Bay, Stewart's Auto Marine operates a complete establishment for the operation of fishing and pleasure boats. Repairs and boat building are also carried on extensively, and boats, with or without guides, may be secured. Reliable information regarding fishing conditions is gladly given visitors, and tackle best suited for these waters is handled.

CAMP READY TO MEET ALL NEEDS

Victoria Auto Camp Rises to Occasion in the Face of Unusual Guests

In the course of a busy season, resort managers frequently have to cope with peculiar requests in the matter of accommodation. Such was the case at the Victoria Auto Camp on the Gorge Road recently, when a car with a large trailer attached pulled up and asked for accommodation. The proprietor, S. M. Armstrong, was momentarily nonplussed when it transpired that the occupants of the trailer were two horses, returning from the Nanaimo rodeo. A garage was speedily converted to a stable and feed provided for the equine guests.

No problem, however, confronted Mr. Armstrong fulfilling the demand for the driver of the car and his companions. The Victoria Auto Camp, which Mr. Armstrong recently acquired when he purchased the five acres from the Holme Summer estate, adjoining the Gorge Park, has recently undergone complete renovation, with furnishings in all the comfortable cottages brought up to date and an automatic hot water heating system being installed.

MILL BAY SHORT WAY FROM CITY

Ideal Resort Lies at Foot of Malahat Drive—Over Three Miles Of Beach

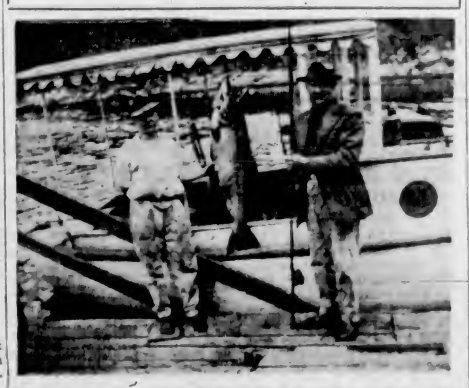

Within the shadow of the Malahat Mountain, in fact, lying at its very foot, is a stretch of shoreline which is becoming increasingly popular to hundreds of visitors and holiday makers from Victoria.

This stretch of fine pebbled sand and splendid salt water bathing is one of the many indentations of the great Saanich Inlet. It is called Mill Bay, and boasts a gentle curving beach about three miles long. Privately-owned Summer cottages and campsites nestle along the shoreline among the waving trees. There is a modern hotel and a fine auto camp, all within an hour's drive of Victoria.

On a wooded promontory adjacent to Mill Bay stands Queen Alexandra Solarium for Children. The situation of this wonder-working institution for children proves that the health-giving properties of sun and sea air are at a maximum at Mill Bay, as sea and sun bathing form a large part of the treatment for the little tots.

Not far from the Solarium gates and overlooking the water stands the Mill Bay Auto Camp, offering a very real welcome to the visiting vacationist and to those out for an afternoon's excursion alike. The modern cabins and cottages are right on the beach, equipped with showers and with a community kitchen. Beside the highway stands the Mill Bay Tea Rooms, serving delicious teas, lunches and supper, offering home-made cakes and pies.

Perfect Ending to the Trip

These fishermen have achieved their heart's desire in capturing at least one of the prized spring salmon. This specimen must surely qualify for the coveted button award offered to members of the Victoria-Saanich Inlet Fishermen's Association.

WILCUMA HAS LOVELY SITE

New Wing Added to Resort —Comfortable Accommodation Is Offered

Wilcuma, a new resort serving Cowichan Bay and which opened only last year, has made steady progress since its inception. Charmingly situated right on the waterfront, the management has made additions and improvements which will add both to the accommodation offered and to the comfort and entertainment of the guests.

The road that leads to Wilcuma turns off the highway at the top of Buena Vista Hill, winding down through woods and fields. Once a substantial country home, a new wing has been built to cater to the needs of discriminating guests, with no loss of individuality or charm. A new dining-room is now open, and the alterations include a writing-room and an unusually large lounge. The view from the windows is magnificent, commanding the sweep of the bay.

Accommodation is available either in the house or in cottages close by. Every convenience, including hot and cold water in every bedroom, is to be found, and the whole is beautifully furnished. A good beach runs the length of the property and there is a large boathouse to hold the boats and the three launches that are available to guests. An excellent tennis court, boating, swimming and riding are to be had, and, of course, Wilcuma is right on the famous fishing grounds which have won Cowichan Bay such an enviable reputation.

That Body of Yours

(By James W. Barton, M.D.)

DON'T EXPECT AN OPERATION TO DO THE IMPOSSIBLE

One of the jokes about physicians and surgeons, common a few years ago, was about the workman who had badly injured his right arm and fingers. As he was about to undergo the anaesthetic he asked the surgeon if he would be able to play the piano after the arm and hand were repaired, to which the surgeon unwittingly answered "Yes."

"That's great," said the patient, "because I never could play the piano."

I sometimes think that many patients about to undergo operation expect the operation will make them entirely new men and women, forgetting that perhaps they never have been rugged, and also may have been ill or ailing for months before operation was decided upon as a last resort.

Thus an old or chronic case of ulcer of stomach or intestine, a chronic irritable gall bladder, or the so-called chronic appendicitis, may have put the patient down so low physically that operation is the last resort, and even if the operation is successful in itself, there is not, perhaps never was, much strength of body or resistance to be restored.

What is called constitutional inadequacy—not having a body that is adequate or equal to the strains of life—is now receiving more attention from physicians throughout the world, and fortunately or unfortunately, is also receiving the attention of rulers who have in mind trying to put their peoples in the best possible condition for purposes of war and defence.

We do not all start off equally in physical strength or resistance to disease. Some of us have the slender body—more prone to tuberculosis and stomach ulcers. Others have the heavy body—more prone to heart, liver, gall bladder, bloodvessel and kidney ailments. Besides this, there is the wear and tear of life, which makes its impressions or scars upon our strength and resistance.

The thought, then, for patients (and perhaps sometimes for surgeons also) is to think of present conditions of health or of the health condition for weeks or months previous and compare it with what can reasonably be expected from operation, for, as Dr. Walter Alvarez, Mayo Clinic, aptly says, "You can't transform a greyhound into a bulldog by any operation."

ALL THREE OF THEM

"And so your son is a cinema actor in Hollywood," said the vicar to the local farm worker. "How interesting."

"Yes, sir," agreed Giles. "E's bin away four years now."

"And have you seen him at all since he went?"

"Why yes, sir. 'E's bin 'ome these three last Christmases."

"And did he bring a wife back with him?" asked the interested vicar.

"Every time, sir. And three pretty girls you couldn't 'ope to see."

Trade Is Almost At Standstill in New York Mart

NEW YORK, June 11 (AP).—The stock market almost shut up shop today as dealings dropped to the lowest mark in about twenty years.

The ticker tape was virtually at a standstill throughout the two-hour proceedings. Transfers totaled only 107,230 shares, the smallest turnover for any day since August 3, 1918. This volume compared with 306,930 a week ago.

Price changes were fractionally small either way at the close with numerous issues holding at their Friday's final quotations. The Associated Press average of sixty stocks was unchanged at 3.91, but was up .7 of a point on the week.

The Associated Press rail index of 49.3 was lowest since June 2, 1932, when it stood at 49.

All other groups gave ground slightly in sympathy, although volume was only moderate, the total of $2,378,825 face value comparing with last Saturday's $2,333,900. U.S. Governments, however, were somewhat irregular.

Australia 5's dipped 3-4 to 104 3-4. German 5 1-2's gained 1-8 at 24 3-8.

DOW JONES AVERAGES

Thirty industrials, 114.23, off .24.
Twenty rails, 20.53; unchanged.
Fifteen utilities, 19.04, off .09.
Forty bonds, 85.30, off .27.

RECOGNIZING AND RECALLING

A salesman asks: "If advertising is such a powerful sales force, why does my sales manager ask me to sell it so hard to our dealers? Why can't I just take orders, deliver the goods to the store and let our advertising move the goods out of the store?"

Answer: "Advertising will move some of your goods out of the store. But it will move many more of your goods out of the store if you can convince the retailer of one simple fact about the human mind—that ten times as many people will recognize something they know about as will recall something they know about. That means that advertised goods so displayed in the store, that people recognize names and brands they know, is many times more effective than leaving goods out of sight and waiting for people to recall the names they know.

When your sales manager asks you to sell advertising to your dealer, he is merely asking you to show that dealer how he can make more money by helping customers recognize familiar advertised brands by displaying and pushing them at the time they are being advertised. How many times have you heard the remark: "I recognize the face, but I don't recall the name?"

WHEAT MARKET IN BUYING WAVE

WINNIPEG, June 11 (AP).—Reports of serious damage to the United States Winter wheat crop and higher outside markets generated a buying wave at Winnipeg Saturday that lifted wheat prices almost the 5-cent limit.

Renewed European demand for Canadian wheat with sales places at 200,000 bushels, and 5-cent bulges at Kansas City and Minneapolis caused shorts to cover in late dealings.

Final quotations were 3 1-4 to 4 higher, July at $1.05 3-8, October 86 to 86 1-8 and December 83 3-4 cents. In the last two sessions of the week net advances were 4 5-8 to 7 1-8 cents.

Bullish interpretation of the United States Winter wheat crop estimate of 760,000,000 bushels, about 50,000,000 bushels below private estimates a week ago, started the market on its first big rally since June 2.

Chicago closed 4 1-4 to 4 3-4 cents higher, Liverpool 2 1-8d to 1 1-8d up and Buenos Aires 1 5-8 to 1 7-8 higher.

Top grades of Canadian cash wheat closed unchanged, but durums spreads eased. Oats and barley advanced 1 1-2 to 1-2 and 3-4 to 1 1-8 respectively. Flax closed 3 1-2 higher and rye 1 1-4 to 1 1-8 up.

BULLISH NOTE IN TORONTO FADES

TORONTO, June 12 (AP).—The week's bullish note in the stock market faded out in the final short session, and narrow net losses were posted for the base metals, golds and industrials. Western oils registered an insignificant advance in slow action. Volume dwindled to 295,000 shares.

Weakness in the golds was not shared by the senior issues. Lakeshore and Hollinger were up a little and Dome held unchanged at 60. Losses were limited to 7 cents for Central Patricia, Gunnar, Maccasa Mining Corporation, Oro Plata, Pickle Crow and Perron. Hard Rock was in demand at an advance of 8 cents, and Macleod-Cockshutt firmed 5 cents.

The big base metals ran into profit-taking and net losses of 3-4 for Noranda and Nickel and 3-8 for Hudson Bay were recorded. The selling was more urgent than the buying in Waite-Amulet and the price eased down to 10 to 4.30 with 23,000 share changing hands. Minor recessions were boarded for Sherritt and Aldermac. Eldorado closed higher.

Firm bids were maintained for Brazilian, C.P.R., Ford 'A,' Fanny Farmer and Imperial Oil, but Walkers common and Distillers-Seagrams along with International Petroleum weakened fractions. Construction and steel issues ruled stronger.

Western Oils moved quietly, and price adjustments were limited to a few cents. Calgary & Edmonton and Okalta lost 5 and Brown, Davies and Firestone were firmer.

MINE WORK IS WELL ADVANCED

Development Is Proceeding Rapidly at Privateer Claim at Zeballos

Rapid progress is being made with the further development of the Privateer Mine in the Zeballos field, and with preparations for the construction of the new bunkhouse and powerhouse and mill.

The 800 level, which was started from a raise of 117 feet up from the 900 level, has been driven west until it has broken out at the surface of the mountain, completing ventilation between these levels, and providing a new waste dump at the mouth of the 800 level. Drifting is now proceeding eastward from the raise on this level. The 800 level has already shown a length of nearly 200 feet of very fine ore, which will average between six and seven ounces of gold per ton for the entire length.

The 1,040 raise to connect the 1,100 level with the 1,000 level is again making rapid progress, and is expected to be completed in about ten days' time.

The new 1,100 level now being driven as a main working level has had the portal completed and collared, and is now being driven vigorously toward the vein. This will take about 560 feet of driving to encounter the vein. A winze is being sunk from the 1,000 level to meet the tunnel being driven on the 1,100 level. This winze will give a three-compartment shaft which will serve as an ore and waste pass manway, and ventilator shaft. The 1,100 crosscut which will be the main working tunnel of the mine is eight feet by seven feet in diameter.

BUILDING SITE CLEARED

The bench on which the camp and mill will be situated has been cleared. The sites for both the powerhouse and the new bunkhouse have been graded. Work is now proceeding on the roadway for the tram line from the mine to the mill, and the trestle to carry the tram line across Spud Creek is already under construction.

The construction superintendent representing Messrs. Shoemaker and Burnham, the designers of the mill, arrived in Vancouver last week, bringing all the plans and specifications of the power plant and mill, and has gone up to Zeballos to take charge of the work. All the machinery for the power plant and mill has already been placed on order at a cost of approximately $80,000. It is expected that this mill will be one of the most modern and efficient that has ever been constructed in the province.

MAN-O-WAR MINES

Further assay results have been received from the No. 3 vein on the Rimy Group of Man-O-War Mines, Ltd. These still continue very high grade. They comprised four samples, which ran, respectively, 7.76 ounces, 4.28 ounces, 2.88 ounces and 8.2 ounces of gold per ton, giving an average of 5.78 ounces for the four samples.

G. F. MacDonnell, the company's consulting engineer, has gone over to inspect and re-sample these showings and to give further instructions to the crew which is now engaged in putting in further open cuts on the vein with a view to tracing its extension down the mountain. Mr. MacDonnell is expected to return to Vancouver about Wednesday, and his report should be available shortly after that date.

MAING A "SCENE"

"The world is a vast scene of strife."—J. H. Mason.

To "make a scene" is to give an exhibition of passion or strong feeling.

The explosion may be "put on" or sincere; it may be done deliberately and premeditatedly for effect, or in sudden vent of pent-up impulse.

In substance, however, it is a display, a "show," which, intrinsically, is how the usage started.

For the word "scene" is through the Latin from the Greek identical word, in which language it meant first a covered place, then "a tent," and finally "stage," all being the place where a theatrical performance takes place.

It is with this last association that the word "scene" has been largely identified in English, and from which stems its broad significance in connection with the theatre and its adjuncts, decorations, fittings, locality, view or any subdivision of a play or act.

BLAIR—At Duncan on June 9, 1938, Margaret Blair, beloved wife of John D. Blair, of Sahtlam district, and elder daughter of Mrs. William McDowell and the late William McDowell, of Victoria. She is survived by her husband, four children, Mrs. William Pipe, Mrs. William Grumbach, John and Mary, and five grandchildren, all of Duncan; also her mother, one sister, Mrs. Andrew Sheret, and five brothers, Hugh, Nathaniel, Donald and C. Jack McDowell, all of Victoria, and Ross McDowell, of Seattle.
Funeral will be held Sunday, June 12, at 2:30 p.m. from Whidden's Funeral Parlors, Duncan.

CHAMPION—On Friday, June 10, there passed away at the Royal Jubilee Hospital, Mrs. Alice Champion, wife of Mr. Edward Champion, of 3042 Byron Street, aged fifty years, born in Liverpool, England, and a resident of this city for the past eighteen years. She is survived by, besides her husband, one son, David Edward, at home; also a brother in Australia.
The remains are resting at the Sands' Mortuary, Ltd., and the funeral will take place on Monday, June 13, the cortege leaving the chapel at 1:40 o'clock, and twenty minutes later services will be conducted in St. Mary's Church, Oak Bay, by Archdeacon A. E. deL. Nunns, and the remains will be laid to rest in the Royal Oak Burial Park.

JUBB—Passed away, on June 11, at St. Joseph's Hospital, after a short illness, Mrs. Sarah Ann Jubb, aged sixty-four years, a native of England, and a resident of Victoria for ten years, late residence 202 Dundas Street, a former resident of Winnipeg. She leaves in sorrow her husband, Mr. George William Jubb, at the family residence; two sons, Joseph, in Saskatchewan, and Herbert, of Victoria; seven daughters, Mrs. F. Law and Mrs. H. Seed, residing in Winnipeg; Mrs. D. B. McKinnon, of Halifax; Mrs. H. Law and Mrs. R. Thompson, of Victoria; Mrs. H. Hanson, of Duncan, B.C., and Miss Marion, at home; also three sisters, Mrs. F. Webster, of Victoria; Mrs. F. Hadfield, of Yorkshire, England, and Mrs. H. Bishop, residing in Australia.
The funeral has been arranged to take place from the Thomson Funeral Home, 1625 Quadra Street, on Saturday, June 18, at 3:30. Rev. T. Lancaster will conduct the service. Interment will be in the Colwood Burial Park. Winnipeg papers please copy.

4 CARD OF THANKS

Mrs. Anna Lea and daughters desire to express their appreciation to Dr. Allan W. Fraser, Dr. O. C. Lucas, supervisors and nurses of the Royal Jubilee Hospital for their untiring attention; Dr. W. G. Wilson for his words of comfort, also to the many friends for the beautiful flowers sent and expressions of sympathy during our recent sad bereavement in the loss of a loving husband and father.

5 IN MEMORIAM

WILSON—In loving memory of Emma, beloved wife of J. J. Wilson, called to her rest June 12, 1913.
"God is Love."

JONES—In loving memory of Wilding Everard Jones, late Major Lovat Scouts, who passed away on June 12, 1924.

LIFE'S LIKE THAT - By Fred Neher

Jane Dixon Says:

A GIRL IS DISTURBED BECAUSE A YOUNG COLLEGE MAN, EMPLOYED IN HER RICH FATHER'S FACTORY, DOESN'T READILY JOIN IN WITH HER SOCIAL ACTIVITIES

"Jane Dixon: I'm very much in love with a young man who came to our town six months ago. My family are the 'rich folks' in the town and this boy works in my father's business. He is a college man, so father invited him to our house one night; and since then I haven't been able to get him out of my mind or my heart. I've introduced him to all of my friends; all of the boys have much more money to spend than he has.

"In other words, Miss Dixon, he is far beyond his class, due to me, and he doesn't seem to appreciate what I've done for him. He is the only boy in the factory-working class who goes to the country club on my invitation.

"When he gets to the club, instead of paying me a lot of attention he sits around with some of the fellows or dances with girls I don't like so much. I've told him the girls who were worthwhile, but he doesn't take the tip.

"I've talked with him about this and he says: 'If you don't like what I do why invite me?' He doesn't seem to realize what a difference it makes in his life to be taken up by the right people. Father says he is a very smart young man and for me not to annoy him. What do you think?—Vivian."

If you love him you will concentrate on his work and not on his social contacts. Good work plus social contact is forward moving, but you must have the good work to get the machine on its way. A poor young man who plays social without integral ability is just one of those things. Salute a beginner who has independence and ability back of him. The man you describe, Vivian, owes you nothing. It is your good fortune to meet such a go-getter and to introduce him to your friends.

Forget class and concentrate on merit.

WORK STARTED ON FOUR CITY HOMES

Permits for construction valued at $13,685, were issued by the city building inspector's department at the City Hall during the past week. Four new dwellings were included in the total.

Mrs. H. A. Allan secured an $1,800 permit yesterday for construction of a four-room dwelling at 630 Toronto Street. George V. Bishop is the contractor.

Miss K. V. Errington was granted a $1,500 permit to convert a house at 1421 Stadacona Avenue into a three-suite building. William Sutton & Sons are the contractors.

MARINE and TRANSPORTATION

ORIENT SHIP DUE TONIGHT

American Mail Liner President Jefferson Docking Around 9 o'Clock

There is no change in the formerly announced arrival time here of the American Mail Line Ss. President Jefferson. Coming in from the Philippine Islands by way of China and Japan ports, the liner will reach William Head at 7:30 o'clock tonight, and on obtaining pratique will come up to Rithet Piers at 9 o'clock.

The President Jefferson, still classified as a cargo carrier, has but eight passengers aboard. She is bringing a heavy freight load, however, and will discharge several hundred tons of general here before continuing to Seattle at 2 o'clock tomorrow morning.

DINTELDYK DUE

Coming in from Rotterdam and London, the Holland-America Line Ms. Dinteldyk is expected at this port on Tuesday, according to advices received from the ship by Adam P. Moffat, local agent for the line.

The Dinteldyk has passengers and cargo for Victoria, and will dock this trip at Ogden Point Piers, where she will load lumber, frozen salmon and cooperage stock for the homeward passage.

JAPAN WEDNESDAY

NORAH SAILED

With all her accommodation taken, the B.C. Coast Service Ss. Princess Norah left the Belleville Street docks of Canadian Pacific Steamships at 11 o'clock last night, bound for Port Alice and way ports on the West Coast of Vancouver Island.

OFF TO ARCTIC

In command of Sergeant H. Larsen, the R.C.M.P. motorship St. Roch left Esquimalt early yesterday morning for the Arctic, via Vancouver. At the Mainland port, the St. Roch will take on supplies before continuing northward. The St. Roch has been at Esquimalt all Winter, and will be away for the next two years on Arctic patrol. While at Esquimalt, the ship was completely overhauled, while she was resheathed with iron bark to protect the hull from the ice.

V.M.D. PLANT

The B.C. Coast Service Ss. Princess Maquinna is at present alongside the outfitting wharf of the Victoria Machinery Depot in the Upper Harbor. Before she leaves the plant, she will be hauled out on the marine ways for cleaning and painting.

The Victoria Machinery Depot is also preparing to do some work on H.M.C.S. Fraser, which will be floated into the Dominion Government drydock at Esquimalt on Tuesday.

CHARTER MARKET

The Pacific Coast freight and charter market for the month of May remained quiet, according to the chartering department of the General Steamship Corporation. Early Summer is usually a soft spot on the Pacific Coast, the report states, and this, coupled with the recession in shipping which has been current for the past three months, has made for an exceedingly dull market. The credit situation in the Far East still continues in an unsatisfactory state, which has added to the depressed condition.

DUST CATCHERS

The new United States Lines' vessel to replace the Leviathan will be equipped with vortex dust catchers, one for each boiler. As a result, when she goes into service, passengers will enjoy decks and recreational spaces completely free of cinders and stack carbon. From the viewpoint of the owners, this installation eliminates passenger complaints and petty claims for clothing soiled or damaged by stack solids. It also reduces deck maintenance and painting expense in addition to eliminating fire risk to awnings, boat covers and pier property.

You'll dance with joy, too, when you know you can make that trip East with comfort and economy both! New luxury coaches on The Continental Limited are fully air-conditioned. Deep, soft, reclining seats. Private lounge for ladies. Full-width smoking room. Individual, diffused lighting . . . and specially priced lunches served from the dining car! It's a fine train with accommodation to match any purse.

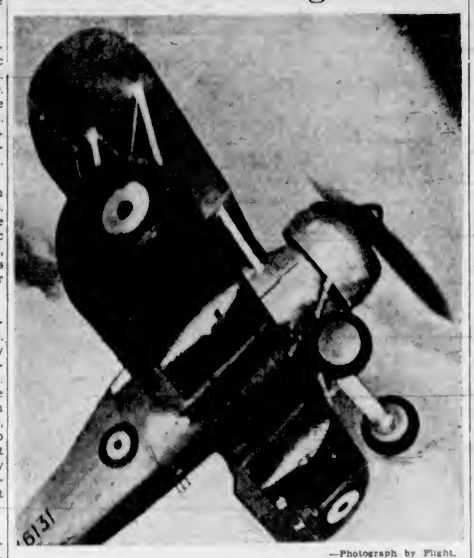

Leaves Vancouver 7.15 p.m. daily for the East. The DIRECT route via Jasper, Edmonton, Saskatoon.

At the top of a steep climbing turn, a Gloster Gladiator shows its trim lines and the efficient cowling to its Bristol Mercury IX engine. This four-gun fighter is the fastest and most heavily armed fighter in the Royal Air Force. It reaches a top speed of 255 miles an hour and is extremely manoeuvreable at all speeds. The shadow in the right hand upper corner is the wing of the airplane in which the cameraman was flying.

LOW FARES FOR NATIONAL ROAD

Special "Bargain Trip" From Coast to Jasper Park, June 17 Week-End

With the opening of Jasper Park Lodge this week marking the start of the tourist season in Jasper National Park, the Canadian National Railways will operate a "bargain trip" from Victoria, Nanaimo, Vancouver and New Westminster to the popular Canadian Rockies resort over the week-end of June 17, leaving Friday and returning to the Coast the following Wednesday, according to C. F. Earle, local passenger agent.

Special rates will be in effect at the Lodge, whose championship golf course is in splendid condition. Camera enthusiasts particularly will have an excellent opportunity at this season when the snows are still low on the mountains, making a nice contrast with the greens of trees and meadows below. Anglers will have abundant sport in nearby lakes.

Excursionists will leave Vancouver on the Continental Limited at 7:15 p.m., Friday, June 17, and return from Jasper the following Tuesday at 1:10 p.m.

VANCOUVER SHIPPING

VANCOUVER, June 11 (C.P.)—Seaboard Shipping Company, Ltd., reported today twelve new deep-sea ships were due here under charter to load for the Atlantic Coast, Australia and the United Kingdom.

They were the freighters Tasis, Primero, Redgate, Winkleigh, Royal Sceptre, Rokos, Eleni, Starcross, Derrymore, Olaf Bergh, Dalcroy and Allende.

Nearly 60,000 pounds of halibut sold on Vancouver Fish Exchange today. Prices ranged from 5 cents to 6.7 cents.

CHEMAINUS GARDEN CLUB

The Chemainus Garden Club met at the home of Mrs. E. Koch on Wednesday evening. C. Pederson gave a most interesting paper on vegetable gardens. After an exchange of ideas on various problems, Mrs. Koch gave a paper on what the gardener should do in June. Tea hostesses were Mesdames J. Coles and C. Pederson.

GOOD SPORT AT REGATTA

Aura, Kismet and P.D.Q. Are Winners in R.V.Y.C. Racing Events

Aura, sailed by I. C. Barltrop, was the best star boat in the racing matinee of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club at Cadboro Bay yesterday; Kismet, skippered by H. Gann, won the dinghy class event; while P.D.Q., captained by Ormond Griffin, ran away from her only competitor.

Four star boats, nine dinghies and two snipes started. The stars crossed the line at 3 p.m., and the dinghies and snipes sailing together went over the line at 3:05. The course was quadrilateral—clubhouse to Paterson Point, to Flower Island, to Cadboro Bay Beach mark, to starting point. The wind was southwesterly and light, but held steady during the afternoon, enabling all competitors to finish well within the time limit. The stars sailed the course three times and the dinghies and snipes twice.

COMPETITION KEEN

The competition between the star boats was exceptionally keen, Aura, Ripples and Aquila all having the lead at different stages of the race. Ripples had the best of the start, followed by Aquila, Boykin and Aura. Before the first round was finished, Aquila, with smart manoeuvring, took the lead from Ripples. On the second round, Aquila was in the lead, with Aura in second place. Aura soon took the lead from Aquila and was never headed after the Flower Island mark had been negotiated on the third sailing of the course.

At the start of the dinghy contest, it looked as though Kismet crossed the line first, with Bandicoot, Dabchick and Penguin close behind. Four of the dinghies made a good race and finished in the following order, with Pinguin just a little more than twenty seconds behind the leading boat Kismet; then came Onaway, which had made a poor start, but worked into third place; while Dabchick was a close fourth.

ALSO SAILED

The other dinghies finished in the following order: Bandicoot, Tahiti, Tern, Helen and Puffin. In the snipe class P.D.Q. was first, and Pelican second.

Times for the boats were as follows: Stars, Aura, I. C. Barltrop, 4.24.15; Aquila, A. C. Packford, 4.25.12; Ripples, Gordon Halkett, 4.25.40; Boykin, R. Blandy, 4.50.

Dinghies: Kismet, H. Gann; Penguin, E. P. Ashe, 4.15; Onaway, Peter Hincks, 4.16.20; Dabchick, T. Beeching; Bandicoot, G. A. Heal, 4.16.32; Tahiti, J. W. Golby, 4.19.30; Tern, K. Walker, 4.19.28; Helen, J. Todd, 4.20.18; Puffin, G. F. Johnson, 4.20.40.

Timekeeper for the day was Jack O. Healy; starter, Captain R. S. Johnson.

CULBERTSON on CONTRACT

By Ely Culbertson

World's Champion Player and Greatest Card Analyst

AN "UNIMPORTANT" DISCARD

It is a great mistake to think that all bridge experts are cast in the same mold. Admittedly many of them have a materialistic turn of mind; their prime object is to win and they don't much care whether they win with simple or difficult hands. There is, however, an important though small number through whose veins flows the pure stream of artistry. One of this type played in a recent New York duplicate game. Although his final match-point score was nothing to shake bells over, he went home that night with a glow of accomplishment all because of the following hand.

South, dealer.

NORTH

♦ A Q 2
♣ A 9 7

♣ K 10 5

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♥	Pass	3 ♥	Pass
4 ♥	Pass	Pass	Pass

West opened the spade king. Declarer, our hero, won and drew the adverse trumps. On the second round West threw a low diamond. It was that innocent appearing, "unimportant" discard that provided South with the opportunity for his coup. He drew two more rounds of trumps, both West and East discarding spades, then laid down the jack of diamonds. When West followed with the five spot, declarer went into a protracted huddle. He knew West to be one of the outstanding players of the world. Was it conceivable, he asked himself, that if West had held the diamond king he would first have discarded a diamond and later refused to cover the jack? The answer could only be negative. If West had the diamond king he could not afford to duck, because he did not know who had the diamond ten. If South had that card in addition to the jack, a cover or lack of cover would be immaterial, but if declarer was leading the jack from jack-small, failure to cover would give declarer three instead of two diamond tricks.

Having decided that West did not have the diamond king, declarer saw a definite chance for an extra trick. Instead of finessing he went right up with dummy's ace, then led the deuce. East, after great thought, went up with the king and returned a spade, but declarer's purpose had been accomplished. West was now out of diamonds! A spade return would have permitted declarer to discard a club in one hand and ruff in the other. West sensed that fact and chose the better return of a club. In fact, he attempted to mask his club holding by laying down the queen. But declarer had long before decided that if the diamond coup came off he would play for divided club honors. Hence, he put up dummy's ace and finessed successfully to his own K-10.

Obviously if declarer had taken the diamond finesse (as was done at every other table) West would have been left with a diamond as a safe exit card, and this would have meant the loss of one club trick by declarer. All in all, our hero-artist only made an extra trick in a game contract, but, as mentioned before, this was enough to send him home with the feeling that the evening had not been wasted.

2—A common threshing scene in Southern Saskatchewan, near Milestone.
3—Creosoting logs at Swift Current.
4—Transport plane ready to leave Prince Albert for Goldfields, on Lake Athabaska, in Northern Saskatchewan.
5—The Borden Bridge, of No. 5 Highway, crossing North Saskatchewan River in the north of province.
6—Briquetting plant at Bienfait (near Estevan).

BEAUTIFUL Saskatchewan — audacious Saskatchewan! Invigorating Spring breezes that give sweet breath to the countryside—to the people, instil within the realms of Canada's humanity a craving to lay aside the tiresome burdens after a monotonous, grueling Winter, and seek relief and solace in some quiet and secluded spot. And nature has provided Saskatchewan as the ideal location—an immense pleasure-ground, augmented by countless lakelands, streams, rolling hills, dales and other historic and exhilarating scenic views—all within easy access.

The obvious beautiful! The trait of human nature is to seek for something different—something advantageous, in the way of a holiday recluse, and within the verges of this inland province of Canada's Great West, words bespeak an intimacy with nature that is seldom to be found in other phases of life. The rare perfume of the towering pines in the north, the stately spruce and maple in the central, the golden fields of waving grain in the southern areas offer an inviting sense of freedom. And to witness this vast expense of prairie, to spend a holiday within its boundaries, one views a pulchritude that has unequaled charms. People travel the wide world over to seek new wonders, new vicissitudes as a holiday base; but so often the base they have in mind, the one that always seems the simplest, the one which they never fail to neglect is the one to be found on their very doorstep.

Geographical Facts

SASKATCHEWAN is the fifth largest province in Canada. The total area of 251,700 square miles lies between the international boundary to the south—393 miles—and extends to the 60th parallel of latitude, which divides it from the Northwest Territories. This boundary is 277 miles long. The northern portion of the province, abundantly watered by lakes and rivers, is rich in timber resources; in addition, these districts are rapidly becoming famous for their potential mineral wealth. The southerly two-thirds of the province, overlain by fertile soil of great depth, includes a large area of the famous western wheat fields. The greater part of this developed southern area is comprised in the great, treeless prairie belt; fringed to the north with a zone of poplar and spruce, and interspersed with open, wavering prairie, gradually changing into a promiscuous forest that covers all the northern districts.

Apart from the southern prairies, which are extraordinarily smooth, the surface topography is generally of low altitude with a gradually rising slope towards the west. The major portion of the province has a general elevation of between 1,000 and 2,000 feet, with a maximum elevation of approximately 4,500 feet on the eastern point of the Cypress Hills in the southwest corner. The climate is quite unlike that of Eastern or Western Canada, having less precipitation and many severe extremes in temperature. It is, nevertheless, most favorable to plant growth, when sufficient moisture is available.

The Basic Industry

AGRICULTURE is Saskatchewan's basic industry. Seven out of every ten of its inhabitants are farmers. The land area is 152,3040,000 acres, of which about fifty-five million are occupied as farms, and about twenty million acres are sown to cereal crops every year. The chief conditions which contribute to its importance as a grain growing province are the very large areas of fertile soil, a climate which brings the grain plants to fruition very quickly, and the northern latitude which has more sunshine during the Summer season than in districts farther south, thus producing a grain of exceptional quality.

Wheat is grown to a greater extent than other grains, Saskatchewan's samples being recognized far and wide as the world's best No. 1 hard wheat. In twenty-five international grain shows, held since 1911, provincial exhibitors were awarded twelve championships and a large number of minor prizes. The annual yield of wheat, averaged over a ten-year period, is in the neighborhood of 200,000,000 bushels.

Oats are second in point of production. Of this cereal exceptionally heavy yields have been grown on well-cultivated fields, the yield averaging around 150,000 000 bushels annually over a ten-year period. Barley is extensively grown, the largest amount of this used in the feeding of cattle and hogs. Flax is an important crop. Rye, sweet clover, alfalfa, field peas, brome grass and potatoes are also grown and are useful in crop rotation.

More attention has been given to "mixed" farming during the past few years. Besides the growing of grain, horses, cattle, sheep, swine and poultry are raised. Honey, dairy and garden products are also produced. Last year there were over 900,000 horses in the province, the popular breeds being Clydesdales, Percherons and Belgians. The quality is high, breeders winning numerous awards at Canadian and international horse shows. An estimate of the number of cattle placed the total at 1,200,000—Shorthorn, Holsteins, Herefords, Red and Black Polled, Jerseys and Aberdeen Angus the main breeds. There are 360,000 sheep. Shropshires, Oxfords, Border Leicesters, with the annual wool clip valued at approximately $150,000. A census of the swine population reveals that farmers own 665,000 head of bacon and lard types. Berkshire, Tamworth and Yorkshires are the popular breeds. The value of poultry products amounted to $6,200,000 last year—made up of chickens, turkeys, geese and ducks.

Natural Resources

SASKATCHEWAN may well be proud of its natural resources: Mining, forestry, manufacturing, fur trading and water power. It is the latest province to have an established metal-mining industry. The northeast corner of the province extends into the Laurentian Plateau—the Precambrian Shield, in which area probably the greatest number of Canadian minerals are found. The Flin Flon ore bodies on the eastern boundary contribute gold, copper, zinc and silver deposits are under development in the Lake Athabaska area, within the vicinity of Goldfields, while the precambrian belt is believed to have possibilities of metalliferous mining similar to those of the provinces in the east. Bog iron ores and glass sands are found at Wapewekka Lake, quartz and limestone at Amisk, Lac la Ronge and Cumberland Lakes, iron pyrites at Reindeer Lake, manganite at Jumping-into-the-Water Lake, marl at Sturgeon Lake, talc schist at Pipestone Lake, nickel at Axis Lake, copper-nickel with platinum values at Rottenstone Lake, mixed sulphide ore consisting of iron, nickel, lead, zinc and copper at Reindeer Lake, as well as iron, nickel, silver and copper at Athabaska Lake.

Deposits of lignite coal are found in the southern sections, near Estevan, and are yielding an increasing annual production. Sodium sulphate, now, ranks as the most important non-metal in Saskatchewan's mining industry, this product obtained from natural alkali deposits and marketed in Eastern Canada and the United States. Refactory clays, salts, volcanic ash, pottery clay, bentonite, mineral oil, radium and natural gas have also been discovered and are being utilized to give further rise to this industry.

In the northern part of Saskatchewan there are 82,160 square miles of forest. About one-half of this is accessible and productive, and provides wood for about 270 sawmills which helps to meet the local demands for building material. Spruce and jack pine are the principal coniferous species, but there are large quantities of ash, elm, poplar, fir, maple, tamarack and white birch to be found. These are used for fuel and other purposes.

Partly By Steamer

By Frank Condon

CAROLINE had money of her own, plenty of it, and never needed to ask her father for a cheque. She lived in a small apartment with blue velvet draperies on one of New York's quieter streets and her parents lived above her and could come and go without disturbing the only child. When you looked at Caroline you beheld a striking girl, young, good-looking, intelligent, and if you tried to remember her features you might recall her chin, which was definitely firm—pretty but firm.

She was an artist and occasionally pretended to work at her trade. On the evening of the ninth of January the weather was vile, snow trying to be rain and rain trying to drown people; the father and mother were safely at a concert; Caroline was in her apartment dressed in a brown street suit, and as lovely as usual.

Her eyes were sparkling and a trifle wrathy, and her cheeks were flushed. She paced to and fro and gestured, a happy sight for any eye, all of which was thrown away on the young man who sat on his foot, smoking cigarettes and scowling at her. His name was Norman Gregg—one of the Mt. Vernon Greggs—and if nothing happened, her name would be Mrs. Norman Gregg.

Something had happened. In fact it was in process of happening and the pretty living-room was a shambles, which explains the flushed countenance. Mr. Gregg was under thirty and in normal times his was a pleasant humorous face with laugh wrinkles. He watched her nervously walking to and fro and glowered harder than ever.

On a small table with a marble top there glistened a diamond ring which had come from Caroline's finger, and its presence on the marble indicated that two who were going to marry, were no longer going to marry.

They were in the exact centre of a wordy monsoon, speaking in sharp, caustic tones—and mind you, they adored each other—smashing their future into flinders and stamping on the fragments. It was partly a brand-new quarrel of the evening and partly a carry-over from previous trouble of less import.

Norman had arrived at the apartment in festive mood, expecting to take Caroline to the movies and she had coldly refused to accompany him. It was not the refusal that set off the gunpowder, but something else.

"I told you yesterday," Caroline said, "that we were going to play bridge with George and Nella. You know that. You and your movies!"

"If I ever knew it, I tried to forget it," he observed. "I don't want to play bridge with George and Nella, or anybody, and you know it; and I hate bridge and you know that, too."

"Quite so. You mention it often enough. Perhaps if you could manage to come up some evening without stopping in so many cocktail bars on the way, you might be in a more agreeable mood."

"So," he said smiling mirthlessly. "That's it, is it? I've had too much to drink. Matter of fact, I've had nothing to drink."

"I can smell. Impolite to mention it, but I'm good at that."

"I DON'T care what you can do. I've had nothing to drink since four o'clock, and anyhow you're merely trying to sidetrack the conversation. We were going to a movie, for we talked about it, and now it's bridge with George and Nella. It's always bridge. You live for the game. You eat bridge, drink bridge, sleep bridge. If you pick up a newspaper, you read the bridge problems. It's grotesque, that's what it is."

"As I said, "Caroline remarked icily, "you've had too much to drink."

"You can't throw me off the track," he continued angrily. "The way you waste your life at card tables passes all belief and your friends say so."

"They do?"

"Yes. And then when we're married, I'd like to inquire what happens? I'll come home nights from the office and discover that you're occupied at bridge with three other female addicts who are also neglecting their husbands. I'll be a bridge widower, living out of the icebox, or you'll be in town at some frightfully important tournament, where you stand to win a hand-painted doorknob. I eat alone or I don't eat. Nice outlook."

"Very horrible," Caroline agreed. "There is, of course, a way to avoid it. We don't have to be married."

It is a strange thing to see what a brief heated conversation can do in the way of wreckage. Two people who have known each other a long time, mutual admirers, suddenly find themselves in a mood of anger. The situation is ridiculous because of its brevity. They can easily see the end coming, only a few sentences away, and can do nothing to head off the blazing words and steer a gentler course. They can't laugh. A five-minute conversation and a five-year friendship goes up in smoke—which doesn't make sense.

It was here that the ring came slowly off and found itself on the chill top of the marble table. Caroline said: "And I am not so wild about marrying what they politely call an occasional drinker, who probably wouldn't come home at all."

"That suits me right down to the ground," Norman stormed, rising to his feet. "You can throw that ring in the ash can."

He seized his hat, strode down the hall, slammed the door fairly hard and went on out into the bleak January night. Caroline sat down and stared at the wall for five minutes and then at the ring, dabbed her eyes and continued to dab at them.

"I'm afraid I'll have to speak to you," she began, and it was not the calm voice of Caroline. "You'll have to lend me a hundred dollars."

They were both absolutely right. Norman did spend too much time in cocktail lounges chatting with strangers, a habit likely to grow on any young husband. Caroline was unquestionably a perfect example of the extreme bridge addict, would rather play than eat or sleep and often did so. She frequently played with strangers and often went in for stakes that made the game genuine gambling.

HE ordered a drink, hoping it would rouse him up to cheery thoughts, which it did not.

Some people came in that he knew, two men and a woman, and as he had nothing better to do, he had a few drinks with them. They were unusually jolly and he tried to think of their names.

"We're going to Florida in the morning," they informed him in the pleased tones of people who are going to Florida in the Winter. "Isn't it gorgeous?"

"How are you traveling?" Norman inquired, looking at them with a dull eye.

"On the stout old liner Suanee. She leaves at eleven in the morning. No more ice and snow for us and down with the chills and fever. Why don't you come along with us, Norman?"

So they knew his name. Must be closer friends than he thought. He gave the suggestion a bare instant's consideration. Caroline was gone out of his life and would never forgive him after those sultry remarks.

"I'll go," he said. "I want to go somewhere and Florida sounds jolly. Meet you all on board in the morning."

Without any further words he arose and went home.

At ten in the morning, young Mr. Gregg walked up the gangplank of the Suanee. But it was a different Mr. Gregg. His eyes were clear and bright. His cheeks glowed with perfect health and his step was brisk and firm, and a great change had taken place in twelve hours.

Awakening that morning, he had stared the facts straight in the eye and was forced to admit Caroline told the truth about him. Therefore he would now drink nothing at all.

He would leap out of that bed a changed man, a total abstainer, a steady consumer of buttermilk and good cold water. Upon making his resolution he studied himself in the bathroom mirror and felt like a better man.

He packed his bags, bolted a hasty breakfast and headed for the dock, a new and better citizen, but not a happy one.

Mr. Gregg followed his steward, bumping his way through the throngs, some going away, some only saying good-bye. There was no glint of happiness in his demeanor. The visible joy of the other outbound passengers passed him by and he felt not only miserable, but ashamed. He was fleeing New York, hoping distance would ease the distress.

He was enraged with himself for having lost his temper the night before and he admitted the cocktails had had a great deal to do with it. He knew perfectly well that he loved Caroline and would go on loving her. She loved him, too. Perhaps not today, but at least up to last night.

As he strode along, he saw several persons he knew, nodded to them and presently encountered the three bright souls from the cocktail lounge. They surrounded him with happy cries.

"We're delighted to see you on board the Suanee. We thought you were joking."

"This is not my morning to joke," he grinned. "I always longed to see Florida and am much obliged to you three for meeting me last night and bringing up the subject."

HE moved on down to his cabin, found it comfortable, tipped the steward, tossed his hat on a bunk, sat down and looked at the electric fan. Within him he felt no desire to wander up on deck and join the merry voyagers. So he continued to sit and examine the fan with scrutiny until the Suanee was down the harbor and passing Lady Liberty. Then he took his hat and went out for a breath of air.

He climbed to A deck and there he leaned against a lifeboat. He finished a cigarette, tossed it overboard and was wondering whether to go on leaning or walk elsewhere, when Caroline came around a corner of the deckhouse. She wore the same brown suit of the night before and a brown beret he had always admired.

"What is this, a trick?"

"If it is," he answered politely, "I had nothing to do with it. I didn't know you were going to Florida. I apologize for being here and wish I weren't."

"I may say," said Caroline, "that I also didn't know you were on board. Had I known——"

"Have no fear," he said coldly, "I shall not embarrass you by my presence on this voyage. If I see you approaching, I shall walk the other way and act like a stranger. We stop at Jacksonville first and there I shall leave. If I could step off now, I would do so. I am sorry this coincidence happened."

"So am I," said Caroline, and without further words she turned and went down to B deck, her chin tilted. Norman lighted a fresh cigarette and noticed that he felt neither annoyed nor elated.

They saw not a sign of each other during lunch, which Norman enjoyed without the usual cocktail warm-up, a rather pleasing novelty. He knew perfectly well what she would be doing in the afternoon—bridge. Steamers at sea are the natural habitat of the bridge fiend and card-playing strangers have not the slightest difficulty discovering one another and plunging into action.

Stirred by mild curiosity, young Mr. Gregg looked into the lounge following his hearty lunch. Actually he didn't go in, but idled in the doorway glancing about and what he observed gave him a start. Caroline was perched on a stool at the silvery-looking bar with a cocktail in her hand. Norman stared in wondering disbelief. Caroline, to be sure, drank occasional cocktails, but rarely so early in the day, and he had never before seen her at the bar. A young man lounged beside her, smiling amiably, but whether he was purchasing the cocktail, Norman had no way of knowing. He choked off a sudden impulse to step inside, take the drink away and order her out on dock.

The cocktail lounge on the Suanee happens to be an attractive double-room affair, the smaller section housing the bar and five or six chummy tables for fat gentlemen who cannot sit on small stools. The second section provides space for card tables, which were already going full blast. Mildly worried, Mr. Gregg walked around the deck three times and looked in again and Caroline had not moved.

LATER on when he peered again she was playing bridge, but still only twenty feet from the gleaming bar and no matter how many times he paused and glanced, she never looked up or indicated that she knew he was aboard. The game stopped long enough to have dinner, but was resumed immediately thereafter, the card-playing friends being unknown to Norman. When it was time for civilized persons to be in bed he was still slowly pacing the decks and she was bidding spades.

The second day at sea found things unchanged—Norman uneasily moving about the decks, Caroline sitting at the bar, sometimes alone, occasionally with a young gentleman. During the morning she never left for an instant. In the afternoon she engaged in bridge with the three casuals of the night club who were responsible for Norman's voyage.

He recalled now who they were—old-time bridge players whom he had met at some card club. He hunted up a passenger list and learned they were Mr. and Mrs. Edsel, of Pelham, and a Mr. Beatty, and Norman recalled that at one meeting he and Mr. Beatty hit it off handsomely. He remembered now that Mr. Beatty was a clever and amusing fellow.

Norman resumed his endless strolling, tried to keep his mind off Caroline, found it impossible and peeked in the windows at every turn. She played bridge with the Edsels and Beatty until dinner-time and appeared at that function in a stunning gown that caused everyone to look twice. If she was having a gloomy voyage it was not apparent.

Everything being serene on board the good ship Suanee, he retired at ten o'clock, slept peacefully and in the sunlight of the following morning he was sprawled out in his deck chair, a book in his hand and about him an air of humorous expectancy. Down the deck came Caroline, now in a blue outfit and a blue beret. She looked lovely enough for any girl alive, but her brow was wrinkled in a frown of discontent.

"I'm afraid I'll have to speak to you," she began, and it was not the cool, calm voice of Caroline. "I don't want to, but I have to."

"You'll have to lend me a hundred dollars."

"What for?"

"I lost six hundred dollars last night and could pay only five."

"Six hundred dollars! Suffering snakes! And playing bridge?"

Caroline nodded grimly.

"With those same people?"

"Mr. and Mrs. Edsel and Mr. Beatty. I think the whole thing was a swindle, as I thought we were playing for a quarter of a cent. It appears we were playing for a quarter—twenty-five cents a point. When the game began they said, 'Let's play for a quarter,' and to me that means a quarter of a cent. So when I thought I had lost six dollars they said it was six hundred and could prove it by our conversation. What could I do?"

"YOU might get yourself a good strong police bodyguard for one thing," he said unsympathetically. "A girl as old as you falling for such truck. That is one of the most ancient of all bridge robberies. You shouldn't play bridge with strangers. I've told you that."

"I know, but don't lecture now. It was probably the cocktails."

"There's another small matter," he continued sternly. "What in the world is the idea of your drinking cocktails all day long? Every time I glanced in, there you were with your elbow crooked and some sappy man grinning at you."

"A nice source, criticism coming from the Gregg family."

"And why not? I drink nothing. I've quit cocktails and apparently it wouldn't do you any harm to quit bridge—when you get to losing six hundred a clip. I cut out cocktails the other night after our informal little chat, and if I never see you again in this world, I shall still go along as a total abstainer from alcohol in all its vicious forms."

"You're joking."

"Am I? Wait and see. You don't find me wasting good ocean hours in drinking, do you?"

"That is exactly why I sat in there on a stool," she said with the glimmer of a smile. "You don't believe I'm that fond of stuffy bars, do you?"

"You sat—I don't get it."

"I made up my little mind you'd have no cocktails on this voyage," she replied with a bit of the old Caroline, "not if you had to walk into the cocktail lounge to get them. So I sat there and drank them myself. You have to order once in a while, or make room."

The scowl on Norman's face disappeared and he smiled, his first genuine smile in three days.

"It would seem to me," he said gently, "that there still remains a trace of the old feeling. If you can spend whole days drinking stuff you don't want, then I say you must still care for Norman, the lily-white water drinker."

"Whether I do or not," she said ruefully, "I need one hundred dollars to pay off those thieves. When I started out to change your habits for one trip, I didn't expect it would cost me six hundred."

"And a lesson you should never forget. So far as I'm concerned. I'm so glad you came aboard this boat I'll probably die of joy. I felt horrible after that last evening."

"Me, too."

"And another thing. Starting today, I would like to take charge of all your affairs and keep you sheltered from the rough people of this world."

They moved down the deck together, and even the most stupid passenger on the Suanee could see that here was a happy duo.

"The first thing," she suggested, "why don't we get after those people and have them arrested?"

"Can't do it," he declared. "They'd simply claim you were telling a lie and they're three to one. Here's the hundred. Hand it to them without comment and take your medicine this time, but let's have no more such medicine."

"It makes me furious," she cried. "I don't say I'll quit playing bridge, but I feel like it."

"That'll be all right with me. As your guardian angel, I'll never tell you what to do, young lady, but your own common sense may."

WHEN the Suanee hauled up at the dock in Jacksonville, the two who had been sundered considered the immediate future.

"While I was heading for Miami," he said joyfully, "it now doesn't matter where I go, for you are at my side. The sky is the limit, so what do you say?"

"We could get off here," she suggested. "I wouldn't care if I never saw these passengers again."

"Also me, too, but if we do get off, we'll have to be married. We are all right so far, but two young and respectable citizens cannot be gallivanting around Florida in a state of unwedded bliss. There is a sort of prejudice against it and I believe you can be arrested."

"That might be a sound idea," Caroline smiled. "We can talk about it when we go ashore."

"Then let us leave the lucky Suanee here and now," Norman cried. "You hurry down and have your steward take care of your bags and I'll do the same—" and here there was a note of sternness in his voice—"there is one thing I am going to do. I shall give those bridge players who robbed you a piece of my mind. I'll fold their ears back for them, crooks that they are. Look over yonder. They're leaning on the rail."

"Yes," said Caroline. "Threaten to have them arrested."

"I'll do that very thing," said Norman, and he strode across to the opposite rail while Caroline hurried down to her cabin.

It would have given her a considerable shock had she gone along with Norman while he gave the Edsels and Mr. Beatty a piece of his mind, for instead of approaching them with a menacing scowl and words of threat, he merely strolled up, smiled and said, "Thank you very much. You did nicely."

"It was nothing," returned Mr. Beatty. "Three can beat one any time." He reached into his pocket, pulled out six hundred dollars and handed them to Mr. Gregg.

"I'm supposed to be threatening you with arrest," continued the young man, "so if Caroline appears suddenly, you sneer at me and I'll sneer at you. Meanwhile, thanks again. I don't know if it will do any good, but it might."

After hoping he would see them in New York in the Spring, Norman hurried down to his cabin and fifteen minutes later they were off the steamer and in a taxicab bound for Jacksonville's leading hotel, where they checked their luggage and went for a stroll.

"We certainly ought to think about being married," he said.

"I believe I've known you long enough to marry you," she said cheerfully. "And I think you must know all my bad habits by now. I'll probably never find another man like you in this wide world, so we may as well ask someone what a person does to be married in Jacksonville."

SHE held up her hand and the ring was again on her finger.

"That's right enough so far," he admitted, "but down here in Florida things are different, especially about marriage customs. For instance, the groom has to buy the prospective bride a present."

"A present?"

"Yes, the lucky fellow must provide his lady love with a handsome gift, else the marriage is null and void. Therefore let us gaze in the shop windows and see if we can discover a suitable gift for you. It has to cost exactly six hundred dollars."

She turned to him inquiringly.

"Six hundred! You extravagant wretch. Why six hundred?"

"Another queer Florida regulation for persons contemplating matrimony. The young man has to spend six hundred and no more, no less . . . There now. What about that?"

"There's a nice gift for any bride—a new car. We could get in that thing and ride all over Florida without a care. Would you like to own an automobile?"

"I would indeed."

"Walk inside the store with Norman, for if I remember, that machine is priced at exactly six hundred. Once we get the car, we can be married with never an obstacle."

"I suppose we really should be married," Caroline murmured.

While they were waiting for the salesman to come forward, young Mr. Gregg began to grin.

"What is it?" she asked.

"I could tell you something funny if I wanted to."

"Go ahead."

"No," he said firmly. "I believe I'll hold it awhile, until some morning when your spirits are low and you require a real smile. Then I'll tell you."

Linen Monogrammed

THE department of the Master of the King's Household buys linen for the royal residences. Each house is stocked with its own supply, which is marked in the corner with a raised satin stitch.

"B.P." stands for Buckingham Palace and "B" for Balmoral, while a plain "S" is used to denote Sandringham. Some of the sheets made for royal residences are of much more than ordinary dimensions.

The dinner napkins measure thirty-six by forty-five inches. They are of beautiful linen, handwoven and hemmed by hand.

Uniform Road Rules

WITH the inclusion of Austria in the Reich there are now 51,250 miles of permanent way in Greater Germany, including tramway tracks and the private railways of Austria. As from October 1 next, when Austria will be incorporated in the German road system, all traffic will keep to the right. Hitherto the rule of the road varied in Austria, traffic in some provinces keeping to the right but in others to the left.

Already Austria has been included in the new German timetable, and all Austrian automobiles bear the sign "D" instead of "A."

Out of The Past

Through the courtesy of Mr Charles F. Todd, pioneer resident of Victoria, a copy of the following remarkable letter, which was written some eighty years ago, has been made available for publication, which, we believe, is for the first time.

The copy of this most interesting letter came into possession of Mr. Todd some twenty years ago, through Mr. David Thompson, of the well-known Liverpool firm of Simpson, Roberts & Company. In talking with Mr. Todd, he pointed out that an uncle of his had been in Victoria in the very early days, and had written this letter, which had been treasured a great deal by relatives.

Mr. Todd points out that it is evident, as Mr. Bell addressed Mr. John Thompson, at Annan, Scotland, as his brother, that probably Mr. Bell's mother had married again and there had been some disagreement in the family, which perhaps explains the very odd commencement of this letter.

It is also pointed out that the original envelope in which the letter was sent did not carry any postage, as there were no stamps in those days. The envelope was postmarked San Francisco on March 8, 1859, and also carried a postmark dated at Liverpool, April 10, 1859. This showed that the letter had reached Liverpool only thirty-three days after it was mailed in San Francisco. On analysis, this proves a remarkable performance in postal service for that early period. Apparently at that time, mails were sent by pony express from San Francisco to St. Louis, thence by rail to New York, and from there by steamer to Liverpool.

San Francisco, February 27, 1859.

Mr. John Thompson,
Annan, Scotland.

Dear Brother:

To call up despondency with all its gloomy associations, I have only to sit down with the intention of writing my relations. Why I should experience such feelings on calling to memory those who above all others, except my two dear children, I most love and esteem may appear unaccountable; But with whys and wherefores, my dear Brother, I will not this time tax your patience; I sit down determined to write a long letter, declaring war against all impediments, and it must be done.

I feel, however, that to do the heart justice, there must be a little said in the way of apology for the above remarks.

"Though we cannot hope forgiveness, still would we plead sympathy."

"When shadows of things that have long since fled,
Flit over the brain like ghosts of the dead,
Day dreams that departed ere manhood's noon,
Bright visions of happiness, vanishes too soon;
Attachments, by fate, by falsehod reft;
Companions of early days lost, or left;
All—all now forsaken, forgotten, forgone;
And I a lone exile, remembered of none;
My high aims abandoned, my good acts undone,
Aweary of all that is under the sun;
With that sadness of heart, which no stranger can scan,
Would I fly to the desert, afar from man."

As you are already aware, I have been "out of the path of the Empire." I returned a few weeks ago, after an absence of seven months.

I left San Francisco in the beginning of July last, with the intention of establishing a permanent business in the New Colony that was to be. Being the pioneer of my peculiar line, I found many difficulties to contend with, still so far, I have had no reason to regret the step.

I joined the exodus to Her Majesty's dominions at a time of unprecedented excitement even in the exciting history of gold digging, when it threatened to depopulate California. There was nothing in the representations of the new gold fields to warrant such multitudes leaving their occupations and families, at one time, consequently, as was to be expected, the rush north was immediately succeeded by as unwarranted a rush south.

Gold Excitement

LOOKING myself entirely over the transitory gold excitement, to the certain rapid development of what must prove to be one of the most successful and important of British Colonies, I could not resist the temptation the new field offered, besides I longed for a change. To one who had enjoyed a mountain life in California during her early golden days, a prospect of fresh adventure has irresistible charms. I found my constitution being undermined by a sedentary life, existence was becoming "stale, flat and unprofitable." If in nothing else I have at least profited in health, not having felt so well in that respect for many years.

Whether or not such a distant part of the world is attracting much attention in your neighborhood, I have had no means of ascertaining. I assure you it was with no little gratification of national pride I learned that the progress of the country heretofore had been almost entirely indebted to Scotch enterprise, and as I consider the future development of its many great natural resources, as holding out inducements peculiarly to the hardy industrious, scientific Scotchman, even a limited description of the country, and a few reflections on its future destiny from one who has resolved to share its fortunes, may not only be interesting to yourself but may serve to induce some of your many worthy acquaintances to secure for themselves and families an independent and prosperous future. The certain reward of all who may bring with them to the new Colony habits of industry and frugality.

I will begin with a few words on Vancouver Island. In regard to climate, it has been very much misrepresented, as has also British Columbia, the two, so far as yet explored differing very little in this respect. The present Winter, which is already over, has been considered by the old residents quite a severe one. Though, upon the whole, much milder than you experience in the south of Scotland. Up to the beginning of December, except heavy rains occasionally, we had nothing to call Winter, then for about ten days we had a succession of sharp frosts, and snowstorms, the snow however never reaching ten inches in depth, which disappeared in a few hours, after a change of wind to the south. Fraser River was frozen over, so as to impede navigation, about eight days. I am in receipt of letters from Victoria, dated February 11th, which represent the weather as being mild and beautiful, so much so that numbers of boats and canoes were again starting on their long and perilous journey to the upper gold mines. The Winter preceding was much more mild, there not being any frost till the beginning of February. Old farmers tell me they rarely find it necessary to house their cattle in Winter. Nor is all this to be wondered at when we take into consideration that the whole Island is in a more southerly latitude than that of England.

Topic of Weather

THAN the Summer nothing can be more beautiful, in the way of weather, a constant even temperature without any unpleasant heat. For this equality no doubt we are indebted to the magnificent ever-snowclad range of Cascade Mountains, to the south and east of us. Our Summer air is refined while passing their frozen tops, as it generally does during that season. Not only is every particle of moisture extracted, preventing rain, but what would otherwise be a hot land breeze is cooled and made pleasant.

The Island is 300 miles long, with an average width of sixty miles. Its outline is very irregular, almost the entire coast being broken into bays and inlets, in many places thickly studded with smal lislands, affording numerous sheltered harbors. The shores being rocky and precipitous, with little rise and fall of water, vessels of the heaviest drought may approach with safety on every side.

These bays and inlets, apart from their harbor facilities, contribute principally to the support of the Indian population, and in fact, so far, produce the Island's greatest available staple, being swarming with fish in endless variety.

This apparently inexhaustible product alone is sufficient to warrant commercial prosperity. Indeed, the same may be said of the whole Colony. At certain seasons salmon literally swarm along the coasts, especially near the mouths of fresh water streams. Indians have no difficulty in taking them simply with a hand net.

With the exception of the Hudson's Bay Company, salmon curing has been carried on to a very limited extent, even the company since the gold excitement seem to have abandoned it, their time and capital being employed so extremely profitably otherwise.

ANCIENT ARCHITECTURE IN GERMANY

Indian Inhabitants

THE Indians, subsisting almost entirely on fish, are rarely to be found any distance inland. Their villages are always located close to the coast, or else on the banks of a river. Apparently caring little about the products of the soil, they seem to feel most at home on the water. With their whole family in the light though graceful canoe, they are to be met with paddling among the Island in all weathers. Divided into small tribes, they are much superior to the Indians in California, though little has yet been done to ameliorate their miserable, savage condition. In appearance many of them differ little from Europeans, being equally white in the skin, with fair, and frequently even red hair. At Victoria two months ago hundreds of them were to be seen wading through the snow with their bare feet. Among the females there is a painful and provoking scarcity of petticoats, whilst among the males there is a disgusting lack of continuations. They depend on the blanket almost entirely for covering. The blanket is also their circulation medium, everything is valued by the number of blankets.

In its agricultural resources, I must say the Island presents nothing very attractive, especially to one who has, like the writer, witnessed the wonderful productiveness of California. Probably nine-tenths of the whole Island is covered by dense forest. The interior so far has been very imperfectly explored. The few open patches as yet discovered are of inconsiderable extent and to clear timber land for the purpose of agriculture at the present price of labor is out of the question, may it long continue so.

Farms Near Victoria

THE small portion under cultivation is confined to a few farms on the southern end, near Victoria. There are principally occupied by old servants of Hudson's Bay Company who, according to agreement, have been granted small portions of land on being dismissed from the service. These people being originally from the north and west end of Scotland, of the poorest class, as might be expected, their ideas of farming are very primitive. Much of their land, owing to the proximity to town, became suddenly very valuable during the gold excitement. Many "awoke one morning to find themselves rich."

The most extensive agriculturists on the Island as well as other points in Puget's Sound are a joint stock company known as the Puget Sound Agricultural Co., composed principally of members and officers of Hudson's Bay Company. They own extensive tracks of land and have some well conducted farms also in the neighborhood of Victoria which are worked by tenants on shares. I have seen nothing for many years that reminded me so much of home as those substantial comfortable farmhouses, with their thrifty looking appendages in the way of neatly thatched ricks, barns, thrashing mills, etc., some of them even having flour and sawmills attached. Cattle and sheep are generally of fine quality, but getting scarce and high in price owing to the increased population. Horses are also scarce and a miserable poor breed. I took one up with me and sold him at about three times San Francisco's price.

For years everything seems to have gone on with these people in the same easy Old Country style, till the sudden rush of gold seekers awoke them from their lethargy. Land, stock and produce of every description went up at once to prices they never before dreamed of.

Altogether farming is conducted pretty much the same as in Scotland. Oats, wheat, barley, peas, beans, etc., come to great perfection. Also every description of vegetables, especially potatoes, which I never saw equaled. Seed time and harvest time also conform very nearly to those in Scotland.

The Price of Land

GOVERNMENT price of land is £1 an acre, five shillings paid at time of purchase and the balance in three two-years instalments. Ninety per cent of the purchase money has to be expended by the Government in improvements, so that virtually I may say land costs nothing.

The open lands in the interior are rapidly being located, skirted by dense forest on one side and penetrated by a tongue of the sea on another, some of these fertile plains, under such a mild climate, are extremely lovely, but their quiet Arcadian beauty is doomed. The incolant, contented savage must give place to the bustling sons of civilization and toil, the class privileged to fulfil the divine fiat, who "eat their bread with the sweat of their brow." Near the coast there may be found passable Indian trails, and from Victoria a few wagon roads have been constructed by the H.B. Co., the longest of which extending to the Saanich district, a distance of twenty-five miles.

Woe to the wayfarer who strays beyond these roads or openings. He may, it is true, for a time be rewarded by the grandest and most varied of scenery, from the pleasant fertile vale to the sterile snow-clad mountain, but he must inevitably be brought to a stand amongst the impenetrable undergrowth of the forest, where the crowded tops of the giant pines exclude almost the light of day, causing a deep silent gloom through which the dark, tangled jungle is rarely gladdened by a stray sunbeam, or ever shaken by the slightest breath from the passing hurricane.

Some of the timber, especially for spar purposes, is unsurpassed by any in the world; vessels from foreign ports find in this always a profitable return cargo.

There are also several valuable coal mines on the Island, one of which is producing more than any other on the western coast of America.

Native Production

IN Victoria we are indebted to the Indians for a supply of everything in season of native production at very reasonable rates. They collect great quantities of berries, most of which are new to me. For a sackload of potatoes they charge one shilling. These they cultivate by simply burying the seed under the green turf. A fine salmon can also be purchased for one shilling. Other fish, such as cod, herrings, flounders, etc., are always to be had equally cheap. A large basket of oysters one shilling. The market is also supplied with plenty of venison. Deer are quite plentiful until the arrival of American hunters; the old residents seemed unaware of this fact. There are abundance of water fowl, ducks, geese and even swans, but with the exception of grouse, there is little feathered game inland. Occasionally a hunter brings in a black bear, but they are not plentiful.

Of the settlements on the Island, except Victoria, there is little worth mentioning. The H.B. Co. have an establishment on the extreme north, Fort Rupert, where, within a palisaded fort, a few cautious traders offer their wares to the treacherous savage in exchange for furs. It is no doubt a centre from which must soon radiate the light of civilization, a light that so far seems to have remained under the bushel, there being no evidence of one single ray having ever fallen on the darkness of heathenism with which it is surrounded.

Ten years ago the fort at Victoria was in the same condition, even one year ago the place scarce deserved the name of village. Only since April last has it at all been looked upon as a commercial town. When I landed in the middle of July it presented something the appearance of San Francisco in 1849, though, of course, not so extensive, the suburbs white with tents, while the few streets were alive with a heterogenous crowd of adventurers in which every country of the world seems to be represented.

Site of Victoria

THE site for a large town is an excellent one; it may expand to any extent, having always a convenient natural grade, with just sufficient elevation. The harbor is small and scarcely suitable for large ships, though with care they run little risk. By blasting a few submerged rocks it may be vastly improved.

Loss of the Steamer Julia

By GEORGE BONAVIA

TWENTY-SEVEN of the forty-six passengers aboard the steamship Julia lost their lives at Vallejo, California, when one of the vessel's boilers exploded with terrific force on February 27, 1888.

Captain Gedge, veteran master of the ship, was on the wharf at Vallejo taking tickets from passengers at three o'clock on the afternoon of the fatal day. When the first warning whistle heralding the vessel's departure echoed throughout the city, he methodically locked the gate from the wharf to the gangplank and stepped smartly aboard.

He heard the signal from the pilot house for the engines to be started and a loud blast of the whistle blown by the pilot. Gedge was about to ascend the stairs to the pilot house when the shattering blast took place.

Everything above the lower deck was blown fifty feet into the air. The entire upper part of the Julia seemed to vanish in clouds of smoke, steam and debris. Stout timbers were thrown in all directions. The water was filled with wreckage.

Piteous cries of the wounded, burned and drowning passengers rent the air. Fire spread to the wharf, adding further horror to the scene of carnage. Captain Gedge was picked up stunned and suffering from shock near the burning hulk. He escaped with cuts and bruises.

Help Arrives

NEWS of the disaster spread rapidly. Soon assistance arrived from every quarter. Many lifeless bodies were removed from the wreckage and surrounding water. Nearby hotel employees and railroad workmen joined the frantic efforts of firemen to quell the blaze before it threatened to spread to the business district of Vallejo.

Mare Island Navy Yard dispatched several craft to the scene of the disaster. Flames soon enveloped sheds used for the storage of railway property. Telegraph and ticket offices were speedily reduced to flaming shells.

Several of the wounded passengers were taken to the naval hospital on Mare Island. Others were quartered in hotels. Crowds of wives and relatives of those who took passage aboard the ill-fated Julia hovered about the scene, praying that those dear to them escaped the blast.

Wreckers worked all night with lanterns shifting debris and searching the vicinity in rowboats. By ten o'clock the next morning sixteen bodies had been recovered. After a long and hard battle, the fire on the ship and wharf was placed under control. Damage to the vessel and dock was placed at $350,000.

Nearly twenty-four hours after the disaster twenty-five bodies were lying in the Vallejo morgue. The whole city was in deep mourning with dozens of flags fluttering at half mast. Two victims of the blast died on February 29, bringing the toll of death to twenty-seven passengers.

A coroner's jury investigating the explosion learned that the Julia's boilers were twenty-three years old. The jury came to a conclusion that a rupture occurred at the end of the taper course in one of the ship's two locomotive boilers.

The firebox was turned upside down by the blast of steam. The bottom struck an oil tank when it was thrown forward. Two tanks were found still full of oil. Divers found the port boiler blown overboard and the starboard boiler blown in two.

Playground of the West

The Fishing Industry

THERE are many lakes and rivers, especially in the northern section, which abound in fish of numerous species. These not only provide food for the settlers, but are valuable for export purposes as well. The fishing industry is still in its infancy, but has been progressing steadily. Whitefish, trout, pickerel, pike, perch, sturgeon, jackfish, mullet, bass and goldeye are obtainable. Fish landed last year had a market value of over $500,000. The value of Saskatchewan fisheries is assessed at $20,000,000.

Manufacturing is not yet one of the important industries. There are several important flour and oatmeal mills, with cement and brick plants, founderies and machine shops gradually springing up at various points. Other establishments have been erected for the manufacture of non-metallic minerals. There were forty-six of these in operation last year. A rough estimate reveals that over seventy million dollars worth of capital has been invested in the manufacturing business, giving employment to nearly nine thousand people.

Notwithstanding the fact that hunting, trapping and fur-trading have been carried on in Saskatchewan's Great North for over 20 years, this section may still justly rank as the greatest hunting-trapping-fur-trading area in North America. True, the buffalo, which once trod the plains in unendless herds, have now passed along, yet there remains an unlimited number of original fur-bearing animals: bear, otter, beaver, marten, wolf, mink, ermine and fisher, which roam through forest and over rocky stretches. Prince Albert and North Battleford are the leading centres of the fur trade. The raising of foxes—cross, red, silver and white—as well as muskrats is becoming an industry of great importance. Other fur-bearing animals to be found are wolverine, skunk, coyote, weasel, raccoon and wild cat. Exactly 1,826,449 pelts of all kinds were sold in 1936, netting the trappers over a million dollars.

Waterpower Sites

CAPABLE of producing 1,000,000 horsepower over an ordinary six-month flow, there are sixty-five waterpower sites reported in the province. The undeveloped sites are supposed to be able to produce that much again. From one hundred and twenty plants in operation, there are 125 cities, towns and villages served with "hydro" power. The total plant investment at present is upwards of $8,000,000.

Of initial importance to the vast majority who motor to Saskatchewan or contemplate so doing this Summer is that the highways and side-roads exist today in greater mileages than ever before in the history of the province. There is a total of 25,000 miles of main market roads, of nearly 8,000 miles of provincial highways. Of this mileage 5,935 miles have been graded by the Department of Highways up to the standard required. Approximately 2,800 miles are gravel-surfaced, while 140 miles have been finished with a bituminous-gravel surface. The remainder—2,065 miles—is under the control of the various municipalities in which they are situated and are classified as "fair earth roads."

Saskatchewan's network of highways, supplemented by the numerous side-roads that act as feeders to the main system, provides easy access to all the cities, towns and villages in the province. Well-maintained roads leads to all provincial parks, and to Prince Albert National Park in the north of the province; all-gravel highways connect with the main roads of the adjacent provinces, Manitoba and Alberta. Others join with the leading roads of the United States.

This province has long been referred to as "The Playground of the West." Proud to uphold such a name, and to continue attracting the vast numbers of tourists from all parts of the world, Saskatchewan, truly, is justly revered in living up to this adage. Seven beautiful provincial parks are scattered throughout its territory: Cypress Hills, twenty miles south of Maple Creek; Duck Mountain, on Madge Lake, about fifteen miles northeast of Kamsask; Good Spirit Lake, fifteen miles north of Canora; Greenwater Lake, fifteen miles east of Algrave and twenty-five miles north of Kelvington; Lake Manitou, three miles north of Watrous; Katepwa, six miles southeast of Lebret; and Kenosee, located in the heart of the Moose Mountain district in the south.

A National Park

PRINCE Albert National Park, seventy-two miles north of the city of Prince Albert, is one of the finest holiday resorts to be found in Canada today. Annually this location attracts in the neighborhood of 35,000 tourists. The surrounding country and Lake Waskesiu, the main body of water within the vicinity, is an excellent example of scenic beauty and transcendent grandeur. With white sandy beaches, towering evergreens, thousands of smaller lakes and streams, Waskesiu provides swimming, fishing, canoeing, motor-boating and surf-board riding facilities for all its visitors. The tourist accommodation ranks with the finest and most modern to be found in Western Canada; excellent hotel and restaurant service is offered, both at the park and at Prince Albert.

This northern section is a hunter's and angler's paradise. Streams and lakes teem with pike, pickerel, perch, whitefish, trout and mullet. The countryside abounds with moose, deer, elk and caribou. North of Waskesiu is what is known as the "Sportsman's Last Great North," and it is within this area that tourists from all parts of the Dominion and the United States amass to take part in the wonderful fishing and hunting which this venue of Saskatchewan provides. Besides the game mentioned, geese, ducks, snipes and coots are plentiful, while prairie chicken and Hungarian partridge may be found throughout the central and southern districts. An open season annually enables visitors to take part in this selected shooting.

Things of History

HISTORIC interest has been created in this province due to several ancient shrines and memorable battlefields that may be viewed. These have been marked by the Department of the Interior, on recommendation of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. A few of these are: Fort Livingstone, near Pelly, the first headquarters of the Northwest Mounted Police; Fort Walsh, near Merryflat and Cut Knife Battlefield, near Battleford—both noted for their scenes of early hostilities between the Indians and Mounted Police; Batoche, near Duck Lake, marks the spot of the Northwest Rebellion of 1885; Lebret, the home of one of the early Saskatchewan missions, founded back in the sixties by Archbishop Tache, of St. Boniface; and Qu'Appelle, where the treaty was signed in the valley—now Fort Qu'Appelle—between the Indians and white men whereby all territory was given over to the rule of Queen Victoria.

Throughout Central and Southern Saskatchewan there are beautiful shaded beaches. Summer resorts and lakes which bring the facilities of a holiday pastime—swimming, boating, golfing, tennis, dancing and picnicking—within reach of everyone. Carlyle Lake, Kenosee, Katepwa, Regina and Lumsden Beach, Saskatchewan Beach, B-Say-Tah Point, Madge Lake and Manitou are some of the better known ones; Lake Manitou, known for the highly curative powers of its waters, and recognized by medicinal science as equal to famous European Spas; Carlyle, known as a rendezvous for American sportsmen. Telephone and postoffice communication is available at all these resorts, while telegraph centres are located only a short distance away.

First class hotels and restaurants may be found in all the larger villages, towns and cities and auto camps are available. The smaller points provide excellent camping sites, cabins and good water. Information relating to motor trips, towns, beaches or resorts may be obtained from the Government tourist offices at any of the larger points, all written requests for booklets, maps, routing, etc., may be forwarded to the Tourist Department, Bureau of Publications, Legislative Building, Regina. Continued reports on the weather and road conditions are given over the "air" and in the daily newspapers by the Saskatchewan Tourist Bureau.

If you are contemplating taking a motor tour for your 1938 holiday, why not make Saskatchewan your destination, the playground of Canada's Great West? A cordial invitation is hereby extended, and a royal western welcome is awaiting you now.

Forest Trail to the Sea

By Robert Connell

OUR little party filled full two cars that started westwards from the city the other day on the way to the virgin forest of the famous West Coast Road beyond Jordan River. Cloudless sky, soft bright greenery of early Summer, flowery gardens and wayside blossoms: all sped us cheerily along the highway. Parties of young girls off for the day to some lake among the hills were overtaken and left behind, gay in scarlet and blue and white. Great trucks flashed past, variously loaded. Then the older world appeared in horses and cattle about the farms beyond Luxton, and particularly in the one-horse sledge a young man was using to bring cordwood down the hillside to the piling-place by the road. In our mechanized world such old-fashioned conveyances and conveniences have a primitive air, but they harmonize with the countryside for that very reason.

The scenery changes strikingly as we enter at the Goldstream crossroad the long valley that finally carries Veitch Creek seawards. On our left the wild and picturesque cliffs of the Cattle Hills or of Mount Helmcken, to use the name of the nearest portion of the assemblage of heights, are built up of successive flows of basaltic lava, much of it along the road showing "pillow" structure, with beds of agglomerate and volcanic ash and with dykes and sills of fine-grained and of coarse-textured igneous material. On the right the hills are less precipitous, with broad slopes of glacial debris. The plant life begins to show a change from that further east, a change more evident if we climb upwards, but noticeable even from the fast-moving car windows. For we are already in a region of heavier precipitation, where the sea fogs penetrate with subtle influence even in Summer and where showers are likely to be heavier than elsewhere in the vicinity. Influences have been at work, however, to modify the landscape: road building, right-of-way clearing, logging, and the inevitable fires. It does seem as if the more money we spend on roads for ourselves and tourists the less lovely the countryside becomes.

End of Sooke Basin

AFTER Seventeen Mile House we traverse the beautiful little piece of diversified and intact forest at the north end of Sooke Basin and get through the trees charming glimpses of glittering water and distant hills. Saseenos, "where the sun first smiles," is all gay with the tender green of alder and maple and pretty flower-surrounded homes, to be followed across the picturesque river by the comfortably old-fashioned settlement of Sooke, from which Captain Grant's broom has sallied forth far and wide to make the neighboring hills yellow with its flowers. Then away across the rolling lowland we go, between the great rock wall on the north and Sooke Bay on the south; past places with historic names, Tugwell and Muir Creeks, the Gordon farm and Invermuir, past Kirby Creek and Shirley school and the road to Sheringham Point and lighthouse, past Milligan's Camp and beautiful French's Bay just seen through the alders, past Point No Point and Jacob Creek. At last we stand on Sandstone Creek Bridge, looking down at the waters of the confluent streams that come down their steep channels to sweep broadly across the successive platforms of sandstone and fall over the edge to the shingle beach. Today the water divides into two again at the cliff's brink and we have the spectacle of two cascades. As we stroll along the beach we see how the coarse shingle has been piled against the long cliff.

The large yellow mimulus and the scarlet paintbrush attract the eye among the fringing grasses and ferns overhead, and at the far corner a wild crab apple tree has grown greatly since I first saw it is covered with a rich profusion of flower clusters. Interesting, too, is the shore, for here some of the more beautiful of the red seaweeds grow, and their fronds, just washed up by the waves, lie glistening on the sand.

Near China Creek

LEAVING Sandstone Creek behind, we are soon driving along the seafront of Jordan River village, across the bridge, past the new village, and then up to the elevated terrace where the highway proceeds on its new stage. But as we near the vicinity of China Creek, ruin and desolation greet us on both sides. The high-lead logger has been here, and the landscape is a confused mass of bedraggled, smashed, and bisated timber, the debris of indiscriminate tree slaughter. Perhaps the best commentary on it is an indirect one in the form of an anecdote told by the poet Wordsworth at the time when he was protesting with others against the building of a railway between Kendal and Bowness, in the English Lake District. The story is that near the house of one of the small landowners or yeomen of Westmoreland stood a tree of magnificent proportions. A neighbor suggested to the owner that he fell it and convert the timber into cash. "Fell it!" was the prompt reply: "I had sooner fall on my knees and worship it!" I am glad to say I have heard recently the same thought expressed in other words here, and I am sure the dalesman's feelings are shared by many of us who hold that there is something to be said for the trees of the forest "on the grounds of their beauty and power over men's hearts" as well as in terms of board measure and so much per thousand.

At last we leave the logged-off area with its once charming streams, now desolate, and their ferny and mossy cliffs sere and yellow in their utter shadelessness. On each side we see the forest giants rise amid a concourse of smaller companions, each of which in less favored lands would be a wonder for size. Douglas firs with purplish brown bark deeply and broadly scored; hemlocks with reddish brown trunks; spruces with scaly brownish grey ones; and cedars, ribbed and butressed: these are the chief constituents of the "forest primeval" to which, if we may use "pine" in the broad sense of logging custom across this continent, we may add Longfellow's further words:

"The murmuring pines and the hemlocks,
Bearded with moss and in garments
green, indistinct in the twilight
Stand like Druids of eld with voices sad and prophetic,
Stand like harpers hoar with beards that rest on their bosoms.
Loud from its rocky caverns, the deep-voiced neighboring ocean Speaks, and in accents disconsolate answers the wail of the forest."

Along the Trail

LEAVING the cars, we betake us to the trail. On foot we can see the vegetation in detail and much of it that is invisible from the vehicle. Out of the sandstone road-cutting the water oozes as evidence of the humidity of the soil, and a corresponding flora has sprung up above and below. Our lovely Adiantum pedatum, of the variety aleuticum, the western maiden-hair, grows in dense profusion. The fringe-cup, Tellima grandiflora, lifts its conspicuously slender raceme of flowers whose petals are curiously fringed, and range in color from white in the newly-opened ones to pink in the earlier. The Siberian Spring-beauty, Montia sibirica, develops here a pronounced magenta pink in its petals. The large-flowered fairy-bell, Disporum smithii, is in full bloom, its creamy white blossoms like slender bells. The western wake-robin or trillium, botanically Trillium ovatum, is so far over that its snow-white flowers are turned purplish pink. We are, in fact, just between two stages of flowering, the early blossoming plants, though later than Victoria, almost over, while the later ones are still largely to come. The red elderberry is rich in its creamy white racemes, and the thimbleberry is just beginning to open its snowy flowers, but the thimbleberry's rosy pink ones have fallen, and instead the green raspberry-like fruit is already well-formed. The goatsbeard spiraea, Aruncus sylvester, is in bud, a charming object with its pinnate leaves of yellowish green and reddish stems.

Succession of Ferns

THE trail leads downhill, where the flora is largely a succession of ferns, often in mass formation. The lady-fern, Athyrium filix-femina, or Asplenium cyclosorum according to Henry, is plentiful everywhere, and in places the sword-fern, Polystichum munitum, forms thickets, the fronds of last year still green, though dull, and measuring as much as five feet or more in length. The triangular wood-fern, Dryopteris dilatata, is also plentiful in places and, as always, a beautiful sight. The most interesting of the ferns is, I think, the deer-fern, hard-fern, or strap-fern, as it is variously called, the first name being the popular one used in most floras: botanically it is now known as Struthiopteris spicant, but in Europe has been known as Lomaria or Blechnum spicant; for this fern is one of those identical in every respect with the European genus and familiar to fern-lovers in most parts of the British Isles. What chiefly distinguishes it is the difference between its sterile and fertile fronds. The former spread out radially, while the fertile ones rise vertically in the centre. The sterile ones are narrow, widening gradually from the lowest segments or leaflets and retaining their maximum width for most of their length till they again taper to the apex. The arrangement of the segments is like that of the licorice-fern's, giving a zig-zag appearance. The fertile fronds have extremely narrow leaflets and are more widely spaced than those of the sterile ones, but of about the same length. The spore-bearing fronds are in very striking contrast to the shining green sterile ones, a fact that in itself attracts attention in mature plants. But still more striking is the deer-fern when it attains the great size it often does in these moist forests and along the sides of streams.

Lily of the Valley

CHIEF among the flowers we see as we descend is the May lily or wild lily of the valley, now in full bloom. Never have I seen such rich profusion of this pretty plant. While only in general resembling the true lily of the valley, since it lacks the large white bells and has glossier heart-shaped leaves, its spike-like inflorescence of little white flowers and its scent are perhaps as much justification for calling it wild lily of the valley as is usually found in these imitative or reminiscent names. It is also sometimes called two-leaved Solomon's-seal. Ours is a variety of the species found in England in abundance near Scarborough, and sparsely elsewhere in the northern counties. The botanical name of our species is Malanthemum bifolium kamtschaticum, though a recent American Flora styles it Unifolium dilatatum.

Our trail divides and we follow the lower one, crossing Boulder Creek, and we go steadily down through the forest. At one place we pass a strange combination of trees. The dead and hollow stump of a giant cedar is sustained by three well-grown hemlocks, while the entrance of the dead tree, more than a man's height, shows the pitchy darkness of the interior. It well deserves the name of "The Den," which someone has written on the outer shell. There is a curious absence of salal until we get near the level of the sea. Bushes of red huckleberry display the ruddy tips of their new shoots and buds. And once we see a bush of Menziesia ferruginea, the rusty menziesia or false azalea. Its foliage is decidedly azalea-like, but the little coppery red bells, which as yet are not out, will in due course distinguish it. It is one of a genus of seven species, natives of this continent, Japan, and Kamchatka, the last linking it up with the wild lily of the valley as well as with others of our plants that do not bear their geographical associations so plainly in their names.

Out on the Beach

WE come at last to the beach, one of those boulder-covered sea-margins so frequently met with from the entrance to Sooke Harbor northwestwards. The boulders are almost entirely dark in color, masses of basalt and gabbro torn by the ice from the rocks to the east, but there are here and there those of a lighter color that have traveled far greater distances. On our right as we look seawards the coastline is hidden by alders projecting over the beach, but in the other direction we can see a line of sandstone cliffs with gently dipping strata resting on the basaltic rocks on which the sediments were deposited long ago, and which now constitute one of the headlands of the coast. We see just beyond the point of our emergence a cabin, doubtless the one used by the line superintendent in his patrol of the old telegraph trail. Following along the coast toward the cliffs we come on a luxuriant stand of the Californian scrophulary, or figwort, Scrophularia californica, five feet or so in height, with coarse square stems and large serrate leaves, not unlike those of a nettle and of a deep green. Its genus is the type of the foxglove family. The flowers are small in comparison with the size of the plant and its leaves, and are yellowish green and dull red. I do not know whether it is from a supposed resemblance of the flowers to bees or to their attraction for those insects that the plant has been called bee-plant. While not beautiful, it is a striking plant. Its odor is of that peculiar pungency found in the stachys or hedge-nettle, one of the mint family. Near this clump of scrophulary we see one of those dense thickets of the black twinberry, Lonicera involucratum, which are so characteristic of this breezy coastline and apparently flourish on salt-spray and strong winds as an addition to their nourishment from the soil. The yellow paired flowers are out, but the brackets beneath them that later will turn red are still in the greenness of infancy.

Trees on the Shore

THE cliffs now appear above the trees that line the shore, chiefly spruces and alders, and we see first a pretty little waterfall and then a lacelike tracery of tiny streams flowing over a wall of sandstone. Then at length the cliff, a hundred feet or more in height, grows lower and emerges on the shore, the grey shingle about its base, while out toward the receding tide a broad platform of sandstone stretches, as it does at Muir Creek. The sandstone here is a pale yellowish buff, very uniform in character, only here and there a little lense of tiny pebbles or a streak of black carboniferous material. No fossils are to be seen except the finely comminuted shell remains, and from one of the blocks on the beach below I am able to extract some small Tertiary mussels for the youngest member of the party. Round the corner of the cliff we come upon a delightful sight, Boulder Creek at peace after its tempestuous journey down the steep hills. Unlike so many of our streams, it is here unchoked by the debris of the forest, and resembles in this respect the lower waters of Tugwell, Muir and Kirby, as well as other creeks, before the hillsides along their upper courses were logged. Attractive as the scene is, time passes, progress along the boulder-strewn shore is slow, and there is the long hill to climb before the cars are reached. Once there, we are quickly off. Our journey back as far as the valley of the Veitch is in or on the verge of a great fog sweeping in from the ocean and tinged pink and yellow by the sinking sun. The fog is the secret of the greenness of this northwest coast: tonight the grass is wet as after a good shower.

Welsh Girl's Enthusiasm Gives Wings to the Bible

By REV. DR. J. K. UNSWORTH

MANY, many times has the story been told of Mary Jones, the sixteen-year-old Welsh girl who trudged barefoot twenty-five miles over the hills for a Bible and brought it back with joy, though her feet were blistered. The story, when told in London two years afterwards, started a society that today publishes every year more than thirteen million copies of the Scriptures in seven hundred and eighteen languages, its total output since the formation in 1804 being five hundred million copies. The enthusiasm of the little Welsh maiden has winged the Bible over the world.

Many times this year will this intriguing tale be told. It is a worthy companion story to that of four centuries ago, when the sacred volume was opened in the parish churches of England. It fits in with the two hundredth anniversary of John Wesley's illumination in the Aldersgate Street meeting. For it was in the spiritual atmosphere then released that Mary Jones was nurtured. Into a pious Methodist home she was born seven years before Wesley died.

Travel, then, to the little village of Llanfihangel, at the foot of Cader Idris mountain near Cardigan Bay in Dales. At the end of the eighteenth century there were few schools in Wales, and none in the village at the foot of Cader Idris. Welsh Bibles were few and expensive, too expensive for the weaver and his wife. Little Mary, serious beyond her years, had a passion to read in order that she might read the Bible. When at ten years of age she had learned to read, she walked two miles every Saturday for a chance at the Holy Book.

For six years she saved any petty earnings she could get hold of, farthings, halfpennies, pennies, or a stray bit of silver, that she might have a Bible of her own. At sixteen years of age she walked one day over the hills to Bala, where lived Thomas Charles, the winsome, indefatigable "Apostolic Charles of Bala," who for twenty years had gone about among the wildest parts of Wales, preaching, forming day-schools and Sunday schools.

The Appeal of Tears

TO the doorstep of this man of God came Mary Jones on the following morning, for she had heard that he had Welsh Bibles to sell. A welcome met her, and disappointment. The consignment that Mr. Charles had received from London the year before was all sold out, excepting a few copies which he had kept for friends whom he must not disappoint. Unfortunately, the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, which had hitherto supplied Wales with the Scriptures, had decided not to print them any more. This was bad news for Mr. Charles' visitor.

Six years of longing. Six years of patient saving. Six years of dreaming of the day when she would clasp the Holy Book to her breast. Her sunburnt hands, roughened by work and exposure, could not hide the tears. Piteous sobs convulsed her. Her distress overcame all difficulties. The good man gave her one of the few precious books left. At nightfall, footsore but jubilant, she brought her Bible home.

Two years later Mr. Charles, in making a plea for Bibles before a committee of the Religious Tract Society in London, told of Mary Jones. The group was greatly moved. Then one of the society's secretaries, Rev. Joseph Hughes, spoke the electric word: "Surely a society might be formed for the purpose; and if for Wales, why not for the world?" On March 7, 1804, was formed the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the first resolution passed was to bring out an edition of the Welsh Bible for the use of Welsh Sunday Schools. It was a happy day when, before two years had passed, Mr. Charles unpacked in Bala the first consignment off the press.

Had World View

"WHY not for the world?" The world view caught the imagination of British Christians. It was a time of confusion and distress; the Napoleonic Wars were in progress. It was a time also of evangelic passion and far-flung missionary adventure. On the sailing ships of those days the Bible winged its way around the world. In 1815 was printed Henry Martyn's version of the New Testament. The Chinese Bible, translated from the original by Morrison and Milne, was published in 1823. Through William Carey, India had her portion. Africa received hers in 1816. The first version in a non-European language was St. John's Gospel in Mohawk that was sent to that tribe in Western Ontario.

The precious book, in whole or in part, was soon carried to the Eskimo igloos and Hottentot kraals. Under the palm trees of the South Sea islands it was opened, and hard by Hindu temples and Moslem mosques. For brevity's sake, let the imagination play around this statement: by the end of 1937 the Bible, in whole or in part, had been published in 711 translations. And if the reader wants a lesson in geography and ethnology, he may ask the society as to who and where are the peoples who read the Bibles it has published during the past year. They are listed as Suk, Ngambai, Mbum, Aladian, Ntomba, Nuba, Nirere, Lugbara, Malla, Munchi, Venda and Lur. Of these, the present writer knows nothing, except that they are all in Africa.

In a recent issue of The London Times appeared a letter from a group of "laymen interested in the Bible," to which was attached such names as Salisbury, Willingdon, Baldwin of Bewdley, Biedesloe, Halifax, Sankey and eight or ten other notables, heartily endorsing the appeal of the British and Foreign Bible Society for £10,000 a year additional income, pointing out that "the policy of the Society is to sell at less than cost." Canada is to do her quota, and Bible believers in British Columbia will be called upon to take a share in winging the Bible around the world.

Most plant experts consider manure more harmful than good for lawns. Large quantities of noxious weed seeds are broadcast in this way, and the lawn is an unsightly mess for months after the first application. Use a complete plant food instead.

"Death Sails With Magellan," by Charles Ford. Seven years after Magellan's voyage around the world, a Spanish vessel picked up a Spanish sailor who had been marooned on the island of Guam by Magellan. For one night the sailor stayed on the vessel, then disappeared. This tale is based on that bit of historical evidence, telling in its first half the story of the voyage from Seville to Guam, and in its second part, of the life of the sailor Gonzalo among the natives of Guam and why he preferred to go back to his second home rather than to return to Spain. The tale is a good tale, certain to be welcomed by readers of "Mutiny on the Bounty," which it resembles in its plot and realistic detail. Mr. Ford's descriptions are vivid, building up true and unforgettable pictures of a vanished time.

"Action at Aquila," by Hervey Allen. "Action at Aquila" is a good Civil War novel, with a vivid battle scene and many admirable touches that can hardly be invention. Much of the book sounds true. The picture of the Civil War, as seen through the eyes of a man who hated it but was at the same time an able and enthusiastic soldier, is impressive. Mr. Allen has again made the South romantic and he has made fighting romantic."

"Celia," by E. H. Young. Placid story of life in an English country town. Celia, her husband and two children, her sister and brother, with their families, are the chief characters, but the whole scene revolves around Celia. Quiet, humorous, easy to live with, Celia goes on her way, a little aloof from her plodding but genuine husband. The end of an old dream and a new insight into her husband's character brings Celia to a clearer realization of her own inadequacy where she had fancied herself most. A comedy of ordinary life.

"Starting Point," by Cecil Day Lewis. The story of four young men in their last term at Oxford in the period of the general strike. They are all clever, thoughtful, and intensely interested in life, but their characters and temperaments are very different. Their destinies are traced to 1936, during which one of the number is driven to matricide and suicide, another to a monastery, one to success as a chemist, and the fourth to join the International Brigade in Spain. "Starting Point" is an accomplished novel and gives a very honest picture of contemporary confusions and problems.

"Ship of the Line," by Cecil Scott Forester. A sea story, the sequel to "Happy Return." In this story Captain Hornblower is given command of the ship Sutherland and sent to join the forces blockading the Spanish coast in the war with Napoleon. In "Ship of the Line," Captain Hornblower lives again. This is a first-rate novel—both as a fine tale of the sea, to be ranked with the best of its kind, and as a historical contribution.

"Very House," by Mazo de la Roche. Gillian and Diggory, the two small children who figured in "Beside a Norman Tower," appear again in this book, now aged five and a half and four. The story follows their adventures on a trip across the Atlantic, then to several hotels and temporary homes, and finally to the "Very House" where there were numerous delights for small people, including two puppies and a very nice gardener. Will stir beguiling memories in any reader who recalls his own childhood with pleasure.

"Sailor's Holiday," by Eric Linklater. The hero of this tale—and he is quite unashamedly heroic—is one Henry Tippus, a sailor on shore leave. Henry has fourteen bob in his pockets and a fund of gorgeous lies in his head. In a series of bright and lunatic adventures which dissolve into one another in the manner of a Marx Brothers "movie," Henry passes six weeks in the West of England, a West Country of the author's own invention, drunk with laughter and good liquor.

"Old London," by E. F. Benson. Brilliant fiction revealing four characteristic periods. Four novelettes, each portraying life in London during a different era: Georgian, Victorian, mid-Victorian, and Edwardian. All four books are easy and entertaining reading and all four are delightfully decorated by Reginald Birch.

"Pieces of a Fan," by Vincent Sheean. Light, unpretentious short stories, written on a great variety of subjects. They range in background from the French court in the days of Madame de Pompadour to the idle rich of the present day. Most of them hang from an episode, a flashing glance of a happy or distressed face, or a scrap of conversation caught and interpreted. Told with simplicity, these stories form a group of lightly sketched portraits of men and women whom one might have known.

"Great Argument," by Sir Philip H. Gibbs. On a slight thread of story concerning a Labor M.P.—an incurable idealist—and his children, the author has interwoven arguments representing many shades of opinion existing in England today; on Communism, Socialism, Fascism, friendship with Hitler versus loyalty to democracy, etc.

"Head in Green Bronze," by Hugh Walpole. Eighteen short stories, with various backgrounds. Two are about Hollywood, others are scened in the various parts of England. One group collected under the title of "Let the Bores Tremble" consists of several tales about three friends who started a firm to specialize in the abolition of bores. This collection of stories will go down as one of Mr. Walpole's most important volumes.

"More Joy in Heaven," by Morley Callaghan. A bank robber, who has reformed during a penitentiary term, goes out into the world again, determined to live up to his new ideals. He finds that fate is against him, and in a vain attempt to do good he meets defeat and death.

"Nothing Is Safe," by E. M. Delafield. An English brother and sister, Terry aged twelve, and Julia aged ten, have just begun to realize the difficulties made in their lives by the recent divorce and remarriages of their parents. An intriguing as well as a convincing picture of divorce from a child's eyes.

"Elements of Modern Politics," by Francis Graham Wilson.

Down Lancashire Way

By J. Edward Norcross

Their Majesties on Tour—Britain's Aircraft—Popular Front Out—Huge Real Estate Deal—Bishops and Foreign Policy

MANCHESTER (By Mail).—Lancashire is a house-proud lady. When the King sent word that he would call on her by and by he said, "Now don't go to any expense on my account; I know how things are in my County Palatine, and you really must not spend a lot of money on decorations and that sort of thing, you know." For the new depression in the cotton industry had hit the mill town very hard.

But Lancashire, as she said in her homely way, "reckoned nowt o' that," and so when the King did come he found it bunting, bunting all the way, to say nothing of flowers. Town councils, in obedience to his request, were perhaps a little sparing of expense, but the Lancashire public would not be denied. Quoting one of their own proverbs, they said, "We don't kill a pig every day."

The authorities who planned the four days' tour, for the royal train entered the county up in the northeast corner where the sour Socialists of one town council had refused to have anything to do with the celebration of either the Silver Jubilee or the Coronation.

Well, there was n't any worst. Nowhere did the King and Queen receive a warmer or more enthusiastic reception than in Colne, Nelson and Burnley; nowhere was there a more profuse display of flags.

They had come into Lancashire by its back door and the vivid red, white and blue was needed to relieve the general dreariness of the scene. For the morning was dark and gloomy in the valley of the Calder. The picturesque fells which rise from either side were shrouded in mist against which scores of factory chimneys showed up black and gaunt.

In an Open Car

IT was cold and raw, but, to the surprise of those accompanying them, Their Majesties insisted on traveling in an open car. For forty miles they passed between solid lines of cheering and flag-waving people; the mill towns are so close together in industrial Lancashire that it is difficult to know when one boundary has been crossed between one and the next.

Not until they had left Accrington, Blackburn and Preston behind and got out into the agricultural Fylde did they escape from human walls, to find themselves between them again when they reached the coast at Lytham, and to continue between them through Blackpool and on to Fleetwood.

And thus ended the first day. The royal train took the visitors off into the country, to spend the night aboard it at a quiet siding the secret of which was known only to the railway company.

It was the beginning of the most democratic tour ever made by a King and his Consort in the North of England. There had been little ceremony at the stopping-places, the town halls they passed en route. But there had been a score of unrehearsed acts of graciousness by the grave and mature young King and his Queen of the radiant smile.

Traveling on a schedule timed almost to a split second, they never seemed hurried, always they had a moment to spare for a kindly word to a crippled veteran or an oldest inhabitant.

It was a miracle of organization. All the resources of modern traffic control were mobilized. Overhead a police airplane sent out messages to police cars and special control stations. "Plane calling police. Royal car estimated half a mile from the boundary. All roads clear," came the warnings, to be picked up by the Chief Constable of Lancashire in his car from which a transmitting set conveyed his orders to mounted police miles away with earphones under their caps and receiving sets in their saddles.

Manchester Weather

MANCHESTER played in its usual ill-luck in the matter of weather. It had been fine almost without a break for three months and the rain chose the day of the royal visit to come down in torrents. That made no difference to the loyal Mancunians. They turned out en-masse in their mackintoshes and waved their bedraggled flags and cheered regardless of the drenching downpour. It seems to be wet always in Manchester on big occasions; in fact, Manchester's untimely precipitation is a music hall joke.

The sun shone at Liverpool on the third day for the first time during the tour. And there one of the most delightful incidents of the visit occurred.

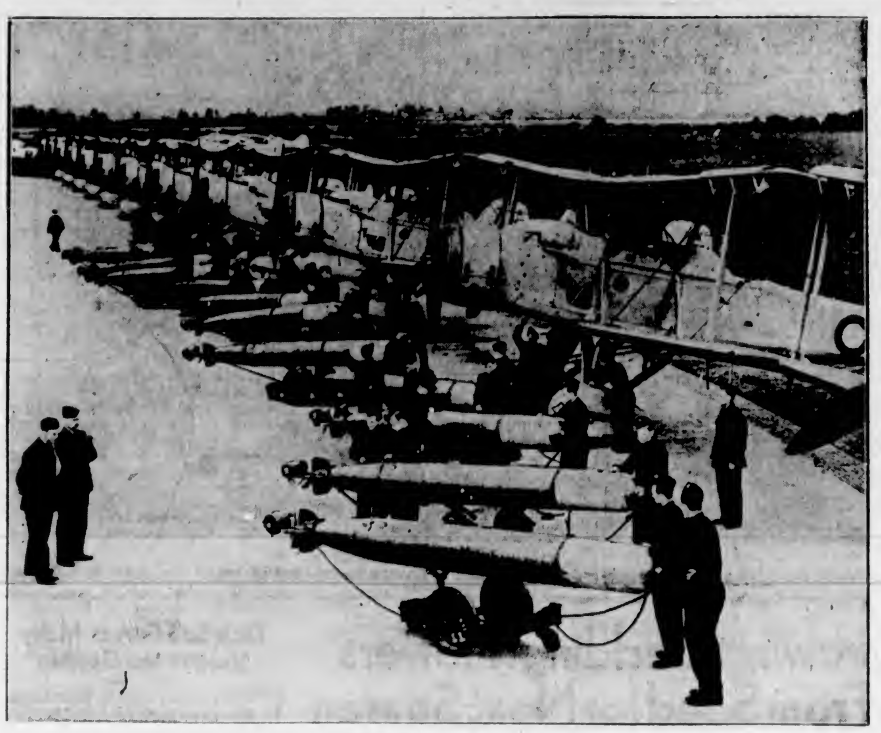

His Majesty wore uniform in Liverpool, that of a Field Marshal, for the first time during the tour. Until then there had been no military display, except for guards of honor at stopping-places no troops had been assembled for his protection; he had had no glittering escort.

But at Liverpool he had to present new colors to the Territorials of the 5th Battalion the King's Regiment and the Liverpool Scottish. The ceremony took place at the Everton Football Ground. The King was down on the field and the Queen was high up on the grandstand. As the presentation was concluded, 80,000 people cried, "We want the Queen."

Blushing and waving her hand, the Queen rose to her feet, vanished and presently reappeared in the dazzling sunshine, walking alone to her husband. Immediately there was a tremendous shout, one never equaled even when the finest goal the ground ever saw was scored.

The King caught the Queen's arm and she smiled up at him. Then he led her to a red-carpeted dais, where, while he saluted, she, turning this way and that, waved gaily to the cheering crowds.

It was the high point, the climax, of the visit of the King and Queen, the Duke and Duchess of Lancaster, to their own county in the north.

TO ATTACK "REDLAND" INVADERS

At the beginning of the month British naval and air forces combined to stage large-scale manoeuvres. The attacking force, designated as "Redland," was considered to be a country in North Africa, with "Blueland," the Isle of Wight, as its goal. These bombers took aboard full loads of torpedoes at a "Blueland" airdrome before starting out to attack the invading fleet shortly after it was sighted.

Arsenal of Empire

"CANADA, in the air-age, should be regarded, so long as intensive armaments exist, as a permanent arsenal of Empire, second only to Britain," says Mr. J. L. Garvin, the redoubtable editor of The Observer, in the course of a broadcast in his newspaper on the aircraft production crisis.

Mr. Garvin is the last of the great editors, the men whose names connoted their journals. One always wants to know what Mr. Garvin has to say about it when a political situation, national or international, becomes acute.

"Why," he asks, "do we trouble about the importance of the Anschluss for Greater Germany when our own free Anschluss with the Great Dominion exists and the resources of Canada for the reinforcement of Britain's air-defence are three times those of Austria?"

Mr. Garvin declares that "it is no ordinary event that has taken place in the shape of a Cabinet reshuffle but a historic decision. It may make the whole difference to the future of the country and the Empire."

It has already made this difference, at all events, that the resignation of Lord Swinton has brought with it that of Lord Weir, adviser to the Air Ministry and the Committee of Imperial Defence, one of the ablest organizers in the public service.

Lord Weir, as Mr. William Weir, formed a committee on the Clyde in 1915 to expedite munitions production. He became Director of the Scottish Area Organization and was then brought to London to take charge of aircraft production and finally to become Air Minister. For twenty-three years he has been almost continuously in high executive positions.

In their respective letters of resignation to Mr. Chamberlain, both Lord Swinton and Lord Weir insist that the spade-work has been done.

"Practically the whole of the orders for aircraft for the new expansion have been placed," writes Lord Swinton. "The personnel requirements of the R.A.F. over the next two years have been fully worked out, as have the training arrangements for this large intake of pilots and airmen and boys. . . . I am content to leave the work I have tried to do at the Air Ministry to be judged at the right time, in the light of fuller knowledge than can obviously now be made available."

"Lord Swinton's successor," says Lord Weir, "will find that the policy which has been followed and the steps which have been taken are now coming to fruition, and the results will be reaped for which years of preliminary work and preparation are an inevitable necessity."

Mr. Chamberlain seems to be of the same opinion. There will be no admission from him in the course of the coming debate of any failure on the part of Lord Swinton. He accepts the resignation of the Air Minister solely on the ground that the House of Commons wants the head of so great and, at this juncture, so important a spending department to be in the House of Commons.

"I should have been glad to keep you at the Air Ministry to finish what you have so thoroughly begun," the Prime Minister replies to Lord Swinton.. "But I am bound to recognize the truth . . . that a great spending department, like the Air Ministry, must always be at a disadvantage if the head of the department is not himself able to expound and defend his actions in the House of Commons."

It is not improbable that when the next honors List is issued it will be found that Lord Swinton has been elevated to an earldom. In that case the late Air Minister will have to change his name again. Like Lord Halifax, he has enjoyed three names in public life.

He was elected to Parliament in 1918 as Philip Lloyd-Graeme. In 1924 he changed his name for family reasons to Cunliffe-Lister. In 1935 he became Viscount Swinton. Should he now become an earl he will have to adopt a territorial designation.

Despite the heavy competition for Government offices during Coalition days, he became Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade in 1920, serving under Mr. Baldwin. The following year he became Secretary of Overseas Trade, and a year later President of the Board of Trade. They called him the "young man in a hurry" in those years.

In 1931 he became Minister for the Colonies and in 1935 went to the House of Lords and the Air Ministry. As he is only fifty-four, it is hardly likely that "finis" has been written to his political career.

Aircraft Production

AIRCRAFT production seems to have been slowed down by a search for perfection. The men in control at the Air Ministry have looked askance at mass production on the one hand, and, on the other, have been experimenting to find the best possible model, with the result that, on account of frequent changes of design, the manufacturers have been unable to get on with the work.

One is reminded of what happened in the United States when the Republic entered the war. Money, men and materials were forthcoming to an unlimited extent for the production of aircraft, but it was decided that American aircraft must be the best possible and certainly better than any built by other nations.

It took so long, however, to invent and design the engine, the Liberty engine, that the war was over before a single American machine got into action.

Sir Kingsley Wood, the new Air Minister, while agreeing that quality is important up to a point, evidently believes that quantity is no less so.

Already he has called Lord Nuffield into consultation. It will be remembered that a year or two ago Lord Nuffield declined to carry out any work for the Air Ministry under the "shadow factory" plan because there was too much red tape to contend with.

Presumably, Sir Kingsley has cut away the red tape, for it is stated that Lord Nuffield is to undertake mass-production of airplane bodies in what will be the biggest aircraft factory in the world. There is to be what is called "specialized mass-production." Other experts, also, are to co-operate to the full with the Government in the new "push."

* * * * *

While painful for Mr. Chamberlain, his latest attack of gout has proved of some advantage to Sir Kingsley. It has given the new Air Minister another week in which to plan his reorganization before facing the House of Commons, the indisposition of the Prime Minister having caused the debate to be postponed.

It is the general impression that Sir Kingsley can, if anyone can, get things moving at top speed in the department he has taken over. He showed at the Postoffice that he knew how to tackle the mandarins and get things done that "couldn't possibly be done." He put the Postoffice and all it stood for on the map. It was he who made possible a night-call by telephone from any part of Great Britain to any other part at a cost of twenty-five cents—the "Kingsley's bob's worth."

He certainly got things moving at the Ministry of Health. Almost his last official act there was to outline a five years' plan for public works expenditure by local authorities, one that should distinguish between immediate and imperative undertakings and those which could be postponed to provide employment when another slack period begins.

Sir Kingsley is a solicitor by profession, head of his firm in the City. He has been member for West Woolwich since 1918 and in office ever since, except during the tenure of the second Labor Government.

Popular Front Dead

The Popular Front is dead and buried. The obsequies, according to The Herald, the Labor organ, took place at Aylesbury. As had been expected on all sides, the Government candidate won, and with about the same majority as in 1935.

Aylesbury is in the heart of Buckinghamshire. It is a fine old crusted agricultural and Conservative constituency, where hitherto the Labor candidate has lost his deposit. At first, Transport House, the Labor headquarters, had been inclined to leave the by-election, consequent on the resignation of the sitting member, to the Liberals. But the local Labor organization would not hear of this and put up a candidate.

Some of the Labor leaders in the district, however, had already announced that they would support the Liberal nominee, and the Communists hailed this as a first-class chance to show what the Popular Front could do.

That was too much for Transport House, and it took a hand in the game, anathematizing all Labor voters who proposed to poll for any but the Labor man. The Liberals, of course, were glad to accept help from any quarter.

On the longer view, the result seems to have justified the position taken by Transport House. In 1935 the figures were, approximately: Conservative, 24,700; Liberal, 13,600; Labor, 4,700. In last week's election they were: Conservative, 21,700; Liberal, 10,700; Labor, 7,700.

It will be observed that the Conservative vote is down about 3,000 and the Labor vote up a similar number. Nevertheless, the Conservatives are quite satisfied. They point out that their majority was about the same in both elections.

The arithmetic may seem a little peculiar, but it must be remembered that we know nothing of pluralities over here; we take stock of majorities only, and a majority is the excess of votes given for the winning candidate over the number given for the next highest.

"The result is one of the most brilliant Labor achievements in a long while," chortles The Herald. "In a division where Labor in the past has been so weak as repeatedly to lose its deposit, the Labor vote has shot up to nearly double its former size while the Popular Front candidate has lost 3,000 votes out of the previous Liberal poll."

The Liberal press can only bewail the mulishness of the Labor Party in refusing to join forces against the Government, says The News-Chronicle, Liberal:

"The folly of divisions is shown in the Aylesbury polling. There was a contest within a contest. The Labor Party showed more desire to fight the Liberal than to defeat the Tory.

Buys Half of Town

IN the largest single real estate deal ever known in this country, the Marquis of Bute has sold to an unnamed buyer about half of the town of Cardiff, Wales, for a sum believed to be approximately $25,000,000.

The land disposed of is covered with 21,500 buildings, the owners of which hold their respective properties on long leases. It will make no difference to them. They will merely pay their ground-rents to the purchaser instead of to the Marquis.

Many old and noble families in England own land on which parts of large cities stand. The Earl of Derby and the Earl of Sefton possess in this way big slices of Liverpool and, as everybody knows, several dueal families hold blocks of streets and squares in London.

For the most part the owners of such properties have done nothing to create the great values they now represent. Their ancestors either inherited or bought the lands, and as they came into demand gave long leases to people who wanted to build on them, contenting themselves with the ground-rents and the ultimate reversion of the improvements.

Not so the Bute family. They are of ancient Scottish lineage, and the holder of the title in 1766, the first Marquis, married a Welsh heiress, who brought with her lands in and around what is now Cardiff and was then a mere fishing village.

Coal was discovered under the land, and the second Marquis set out to make Cardiff, as a port, the rival of Liverpool. He ran railways from his mines to the famous Bute Docks, which he also built.

The first dock cost him $1,750,000 and it taxed all his resources to complete it. The dock was opened in 1839 and the shipments of coal that year amounted to only 4,562 tons. Twenty years later they had gone up to 1,796,000 tons.

Despite sales of property from time to time, presumably occasioned by the death duties, the Marquis of Bute remains one of the largest landowners in the country, his estates aggregating about 117,000 acres. He retains, for the present, his coal royalties. If the royalities bill now before the House of Lords goes through, however, these will become the property of the state in about fifteen years. They have yielded as much as $1,250,000 a year.

The Marquis is long on titles and easties; he has about a dozen of the former and seven or eight of the latter, one of them in Spain, to say nothing of several residences. His principal seat is Cardiff Castle, which stands in a lovely 70-acre park in the middle of Cardiff. This, of course, has not been sold, and the Cardiff people have learned with no little delight that the Marquis will continue to live in it for part of the year as hitherto.

Cardiff Castle dates back to Roman times and is one of the most richly furnished homes in Britain. It is maintained with almost feudal splendor, and fifty servants in livery wait on the Marquis when he is in residence.

Despite their ancient lineage and their great possessions, the Marquises of Bute have not figured in British history much since the eighteenth century. At that time, however, an Earl of Bute, he who was created the first Marquis and married the Welsh heiress, figured rather too much.

He became the confidant of the mother of George III when that King, then a very young man, ascended the throne. "George, be King," the determined woman dinned into the lad's ears.

And under the guidance of Lord Bute George determined to be King and succeeded to such purpose that he got rid of Pitt, made Bute his Prime Minister and concluded a disgraceful peace with France. They burned jack-boots in the streets of London by way of delicate compliment to his lordship.

The marquisate, presumably, was the reward for his effort to be to George III what Wentworth, Earl Strafford, had been to Charles I.

Bishops Disagree

WHEN bishops disagree, who shall decide? The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Durham sat beside each other during the debate in the House of Lords on the Government's foreign policy. Nevertheless, there was a great gulf between them.

He did not know that any good purpose could be served now by recriminations or lamentations, the Archbishop said, alluding to the proposed recognition of the conquest of Abyssinnia.

There were two very clear facts, he continued. One was that in July, 1936, the League of Nations admitted its failure and abandoned collective action; the other, that at least a very large part of Abyssinia was now in possession of Italy.

What was quite certain was that Italy could not be dislodged from Abyssinnia without her own withdrawal, which was most improbable, or by war, which was quite unthinkable.

In view of those patent facts, he asked, was it their duty to continue to protest against any sort of acquiescence in the recognition of Italian sovereignty?

"It is with the utmost reluctance, amounting almost to pain, that I have been driven to this conclusion," the Archbishop said. "I do not think I have ever made a speech in this House with more distaste than this one. But I cannot believe it is a sacrifice of principle for expedieney. I am not conscious of having driven any bargain in my conscienee with Mephistopheles."

* * * * *

We are told to face the facts, said the Bishop of Durham, but all were not being faced. A self-respecting nation ought to face such facts as moral principle, national honor and its commitments, and the ultimate outcome of subordinating principle to what were called interests.

"You can go on conceding now this point and now that to push off the immediate conflict," he said. "You make sure that when the inevitable strife is at last joined you have conceded the strategical points to the adversary and made it certain that civilization will be defeated . . .

"Before anything else comes out of this agreement, Spain is to be added to the Fascist powers—and the gateway to the Mediterranean is to be put in the hands of those who cannot by any stretch of imagination be called our friends."

It seemed grotesque, concluded the Bishop, "that our country, the guardian of great Imperial interests and liberty and justice, should have sunk to the methods it had."

England and Scotland have their own divorce laws. A bill dealing with divorce in Scotland is now before the House of Commons. It provides, as does the recent English act, that incurable insanity shall be a ground of divorce.

When, however, the bill came before the Scottish standing committee Miss Horsbrugh, Conservative member for Dundee, moved that the clause be deleted. Types of insanity which were formerly regarded as incurable were now being cured, she said. She believed that the greatest experts would decline to say that any particular case was incurable. She was sure that the English law in this respect would become a dead letter.

The Lord Advocate said that the chances of recovery of a married lunatic who had been at least five years in an institution appeared to be something of the ratio of twenty-four to 550.

The high-pitched tone signal which tells the caller on the telephone that the line he wants is engaged is to go and something pleasanter is to take its place.

A year or two ago the Postoffice, which has the telephone and telegraph monopoly in Great Britain, took a great deal of trouble to find a "girl with a golden voice" to give the time signals, and when they got her they made records which are now in daily use.

This time they wanted only one signal, so they speedily found a girl who could say "line engaged" so sweetly that one really didn't mind not getting one's number. She, too, has made the necessary record which is to be substituted for the old tone signal.

There will be, of course, some temptation to argue with her, but like that nineteenth century girl in the song, with her "tinkle-tum," "line engaged," will be all that she can say.

Festival Announced

THE Salzburg Festival Season will be held as usual, and will be open from July 23 to August 31. The Festival Theatre will give performances of Mozart's "Cosi fan Tutte" and "Don Giovanni," Beethoven's "Fidelio," Wagner's "Meistersinger" and "Tannhauser," Verdi's "Falstaff" and Richard Strauss' "Der Rosenkavalier." The conducting will be shared by Dr. William Furtwangler, Vittorio Guy, Karl Bohm and Hans Knappertsbusch.

Besides the opera performances at the Festival Theatre, Goethe's "Egmont," produced by Heinz Hilpert, will be given in the Courtyard of the Festival Theatre, and Kleist's "Amphitryon," with scenery by Erich Engel, will be staged in the Cathedral Square.

While the rest of Europe talks of other Salzburgs, Field-Marshal Goering has said, "We shall give Salzburg back its German character." The Neues Wiener Journal, describing the music festival in the "bad old days," recently declared that the audience was composed "not of German art enthusiasts, but chattering young American and English girls dressed up in Salzburg costumes who . . . did not come to hear music . . . but to be able to tell stories at home . . ."

Witnesses Get Tea

SOUTH AFRICAN courts have a new method of obtaining clear stories from witnesses.

Commenting on the difficulty facing the average man or woman suddenly faced with the necessity of recalling an event or describing an occurrence witnessed a court officer recently outlined a method fast gaining popularity in South Africa.

"I always found that the best method was to leave the witness in a room by himself with a cup of tea, a cigarette if he smokes, and a pencil and a piece of paper after you have asked him to write down all he remembers about the criminal's appearance.

"Relaxed, and his nerves soothed by the tea, the witness remembers more clearly than if forced suddenly to concentrate."

Perhaps an invitation to tea instead of arrest as a "material witness" will be the next innovation in U.S. police methods.

Suburb and Country

The Care of Grapes While The Fruit is Developing

INEXPERIENCED grape growers often do immense damage to their vines by allowing them to overcrop. As with all fruits, overcropping lowers the plant's constitution, and is nearly always responsible for meagre cropping the following season.

Many experienced growers claim that eight good bunches are quite sufficient for each rod, therefore those not required should be removed quite early. In no case should more than one bunch be allowed to a shoot and no fruit should be allowed to develop on the leading shoot.

After the surplus bunches have been removed, due attention should be given to the thinning of the grapes on those allowed to remain. If these bunches were allowed to grow naturally, small, crowded, and valueless berries (often mouldy and decayed) would be the invariable result.

One may take it that the berries are quite ready for thinning a fortnight after they have set.

For this operation the use of a pair of special grape-thinning scissors is advisable. These scissors have long handles and small, tapering blades with sharp points, highly suitable for inserting between the berries.

As the grapes should never be touched by the hands, a thin, forked stick, six or seven inches long, should be made out of a piece of old box wood. This stick is most useful for holding and turning the bunch as the operations proceeds.

Preliminary Thinning

THE first move in the thinning direction is to remove from the bunch all the small and worthless berries sometimes found in large numbers as the result of faulty fertilization.

Any tendrils present should also be removed.

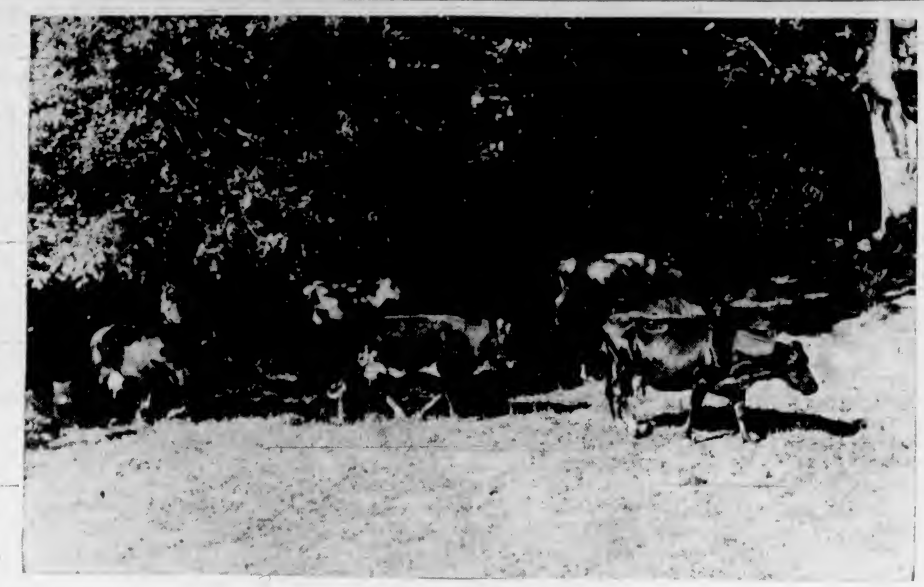

Thinning proper should then commence, and it is best to start at the bottom of the bunch and work upwards. The bottom berry which forms the point of the bunch should always be left, but the ones closely touching should be cut away. The bottom of the bunch always requires more thinning than the top.

On looking at the berries one will notice that they grow in small groups. It is a good plan to reduce groups of five berries to two and three to one. At the same time one should try to visualize the swelling berries and remove as necessary for both space and shape.

Where one is not quite sure of oneself, it is always best to thin the bunches in one or two operations.

With large bunches it is always best to secure the shoulders (or topmost branches of the bunch) to the wire, trellis or rod.

Where bunches are required for late use, they should be thinned more drastically than those to be used directly they are cut.

Transferring House Plants To Open for Summer Season

DURING the early part of June, when most house plants can advantageously be transferred from indoors to the open, is an excellent time for repotting many of them.

The soil used for decorative plants is rich and well drained. One made up of equal parts of decayed sod or of good garden loam, leaf mould, well-decomposed manure and sand will serve these plants well. To prevent the soil from becoming "sour," a handful of charcoal is added to each peck of soil, the charcoal having been broken into fragments the size of marbles. A handful of bonemeal may also be added to each peck of soil; but if this is done, it is advisable to mix it with the soil several days in advance. Plants are often killed by a soil that is too rich.

In repotting, the required new container is seldom more than one size larger than the old one. For instance, a six-inch pot would would replace a five-inch pot. A more pronounced change is dangerous, for when too much fresh soil is present in the pot it is liable to become water-soaked and sour.

Removing the Plant

SOIL is moistened about two hours before the plant is to be removed from the old pot. By taking that precaution, the roots will not be injured. Care is taken not to break the ball of earth that surrounds the roots. The loose dirt about the top of the "ball" is rubbed off, and the drainage material is removed from the bottom of the ball. With the roots of palms one has to be especially careful, for they will begin to look sickly if even the slightest injury is done to their roots.

In the bottom of each new pot there is to be placed some broken pottery and enough soil to bring the top of the ball from three-fourths to one inch below the rim of the pot. Then the hole made by removing the old drainage is filled with new soil, and the plant is put into the pot, filling in the vacant space with soil.

Water Thoroughly

BEING sure that the plant is perpendicular, one presses down the soil around the edges by means of a "potting-stick," preferably one made of soft wood. Smoothing off the top of the soil, a space of one-half to one inch is left below the edge, according to the size of the pot, for a watering space. Then the plant receives a thorough watering.

If house plants are put out of doors during the hot months, where they can have the rains and fresh air, they will be in much better condition in the Fall to withstand the trying house conditions than if kept indoors all Summer.

House plant pots are buried to the rims in soil, ashes or peat moss during the hot months. This prevents the evaporation of water from the sides of the pots and thus one may keep an even moisture in the soil without frequent watering. Unless the pots are buried they will need water on hot days.

Building a Colony When Bees Send Out a Swarm

THE experience of most old beekeepers is that, sometimes, whatever may have been done to prevent it, certain strains of bees will send out a swarm.

Naturally, the novice wants to know what he should do in such an event. The first step is to hive the swarm temporarily, stationing a hive or box on the ground just underneath the tree or other object on which the swarm settled.

Next, prepare an empty hive by furnishing its brood-chamber with ten frames of fully drawn-out worker-comb (or new frames fitted with full-sized sheets of foundation, if drawn-out combs be not available). Place quilts and roof of this hive in position and carry it to the hive whence the swarm issued, establishing the new hive close by the side of the old one.

Then—a little before sundown, when most of the bees will be in for the night—bring the swarm-skep over and shake the bees out on the alighting-board of the new hive.

Now remove the mother-hive to a fresh location some distance away, and as soon as the swarming bees have all run into the new hive, place that on the spot where the old hive stood.

All foraging bees leaving the latter on the morrow will return to the old location, joining up with the swarm, thus greatly increasing its strength, while the old stock will soon build up to its former working-strength again.

Cabbage Maggots Attack Many Other Plants

CABBAGE maggots attack such plants as cabbages, cauliflowers, turnips and radishes. The adults, which are two-winged flies, lay their eggs on the stem of the plants about the time the European plum first comes into bloom. Caggage maggots can be controlled by the use of corrosive sublimate, according to the Division of Entomolgy, Dminion Department of Agriculture. The corrosive sublimate may be procured at most seed houses, and when used is diluted in water at the rate of one ounce to ten gallons. As the sublimate loses much of its strength when brought into contact with metals, it should be mixed in and applied from glass, earthenware, or wooden vessels. This point is very important.

Two or three days after the cabbage and cauliflower plants have been set out in the field, or garden, the solution should be poured over the stems and around the bases of the plants, using about half a cupful for each plant. Care should be taken to wet the stems thoroughly as well as the soil immediately surrounding the base. Two subsequent applications should be made, the second seven days after the first application and the third seven days later, making three treatments in all. It is important to make the first application early, as the success of the control depends very largely on this point.

In the case of radishes, the solution should be poured over the young plants about three days after they appear above ground and a second application made a week later. The radishes must not be treated when they are nearly ready to be used, as the practice may be very dangerous to the buyers. In view of the fact that corrosive sublimate is a deadly poison to human beings and to animals, great care should be exercised in its use.

Antirrhinums in Walls

ANTIRRHINUMS are naturally wall plants. If you visit an old-world garden, or a garden which has been unoccupied for a time, you are almost sure to find that antirrhinums have established themselves in the walls. It is their natural home, and right well do they look.

If, therefore, you have vacant pockets in your retaining wall, why not fill them with medium or Tom Thumb varieties?

All you need do is to water regularly until growth restarts, and before long you will have a glorious display—all the more welcome because it is at its best when the majority of retaining wall subjects are over.

Incidentally, the plants will seed into the crannies, and every year the seedlings that come up will save you the trouble of replanting. And they will adopt a special habit of growth that looks delightful in walls of this kind.

Growing Bedding Flowers From Seed for Next Season

THERE is a great deal of satisfaction in growing plants from seed right through to the flowering stage, to watch them progress and know that it is "all your own work." And the amateur should remember that he will find it very useful to grow at any rate some of his Spring bedding plants from seed.

Now is the ideal time to sow wallflowers, polyanthuses, primroses, double daisies, forget-me-nots, aubrietia, arabis, and other Spring flowers. The urge to grow is at its keenest, the risk of late frost has, we hope, passed, and the seedlings have plenty of time between now and Autumn to make strong and healthy plants.

At this season it is better to sow in the open ground than in boxes or in a frame. The plants will grow more freely and will not so quickly become dry.

A partially shaded border should be chosen—one shaded from the hottest rays of the sun. A position facing north is quite good, but if, from force of circumstances, the seeds have to be sown in full sunshine, copious waterings must be given as required.

Dig the ground thoroughly and, if it was enriched with manure for a previous crop, it will not now require a fresh supply, but it will be of service to dig in a liberal sprinkling of old soot.

As digging proceeds, the soil should be broken down as fine as possible and the surface finished off with a rake. If the ground is hollow or loose, it must be trodden down firm before raking. Plants, and especially seedlings, will not root satisfactorily in hollow ground.

Making the Drills

A LIBERAL distance, quite nine inches, can be permitted between the drills, for this will permit the use of a hoe when the seeds have germinated—a most important item of cultivation. A line should be stretched taut, to facilitate the drawing of the very shallow drills, and a valuable practice is to well water the open drills with a fine-rosed can before the seeds are sown. This will conserve moisture for a long time and give the seedlings a good start in life.

Another little practice well worth while is to open the drills on a sunny morning and defer sowing the seed until afternoon. Do not, however, water the drills until a short time previous to sowing.

The seeds should be scattered along the drills thinly and evenly. Seedlings crowded from the start are given a very bad send-off and will rarely grow on into the sturdy young plants so much desired.

If the weather is dry, there should be no hesitation about watering, even before germination has taken place, and always use a can with a fine rose. As soon as the seedlings can be clearly seen, the hoe should be used between the rows and, from the start, they must be kept free from weeds by hand weeding.

In the Nursery Bed

THE next matter of importance is to prepare a nursery bed for the reception of the little plants. The polyanthuses and primroses will like a shady place, the forget-me-nots, too, but the wallflowers, and most other things, will thrive in full sunshine if well supplied with water.

A good supply of well-decayed manure must be incorporated with the soil, also a liberal sprinkling of old soot. A further incentive to growth is bonemeal, used at the rate of two to three ounces per square yard of bed.

The seedlings should be well watered before being removed from the seed bed, and they must be eased with a fork and taken up with as much soil as possible.

Plant the wallflowers in rows a foot apart, with six inches from plant to plant in the rows. Polyanthuses and primroses, double daisies, forget-me-nots and other plants will be satisfied with three to four inches from plant to plant and nine inches between the rows.

Firm planting is essential, and the little plants must be transferred from seed bed to nursery bed before they become crowded.

The Summer routine comprises watering, hoeing, and hand weeding wherever the hoe cannot be used. In the evenings of warm days the plants will much appreciate a spraying with clear water.

Excessive Amount Grain Hulls Are Harmful to Weanling Pigs

UNTHRIFTINESS and high mortality of suckling and weanling pigs increases the cost of producing market hogs, states R. M. Hopper, of the Dominion Experimental Farm at Brandon. Suitable feeds and sanitary environment are the two prime factors that influence the health of young pigs. It is during the early stages of development that the market pig is capable of making the most economical gains, and all practical precautionary measures that will safeguard the health of the young pigs and permit them to make maximum growth at this time will prove well worth while, and will have an important influence upon production costs.

One precautionary measure that every swine raiser should take is to avoid permitting suckling or weanling pigs to consume a meal mixture that contains a large percentage of fibre in the form of oat or barley hulls. Such material causes injury to the delicate membranes of the stomach and intestines, and these injuries in turn give rise to intestinal disorders which may result in death, or in reduced vitality that predispose the young pig to other ailments. The condition almost invariably results in unthriftiness and unthrifty young pigs rarely prove profitable to the producer.

Minimum of Hulls

AN efficient ration for young pigs is one that is easily digested, contains a minimum amount of crude fibre in the form of hulls, and supplies an adequate amount of protein. The young pig first shows interest in solid feed when about four weeks old, at which time he begins eating from the mother's trough. Feeds supplied the brood sow are usually much too coarse for young pigs, and it is therefore advisable to provide a creep or barricade in the pen and to supply suitable feeds in separate trough for the litter. This practice has two advantages: the young pigs become accustomed to eating from a trough before they are weaned and the shock or set-back at this time is reduced to a minimum. The second advantage is that the young pigs will consume less of the harmful coarse feed from the mother's trough.

The hulls of oats and barley should be looked upon as definitely harmful and necessary precautions taken to prevent young pigs from eating them. At the Dominion Experimental Farm, Brandon, the plan has been followed for a number of years of using either ground hulless oats, or common oat chop that has been sifted through mosquito netting, in the meal mixture for creep feeding and for weanling pigs. Ground barley when used for very young pigs is also sifted. Ordinary oats contain from four to five times as much crude fibre as hulless varieties. In yield, hulless varieties compare favorably with the ordinary varieties, when the kernel only is considered. The growing of sufficient hulless oats to supply the young pigs with a suitable creep and yeaning ration is recommended.

Rich Soil Serves Many Uses in the Garden

EVERY gardener needs at times a quantity of rich earth for special purposes, writes Julia W. Wolfe, in The New York Times. Among many uses, such a compost affords soil for potting flowers and plants, for covering delicate seeds, and for giving to transplanted plants a ready impetus to vigorous growth. Since it is not to be had in the garden itself, and cannot readily be bought, the best plan is to prepare such soil and set it aside for use when needed.

A good sifter of quarter-inch mesh, or even smaller, through which to run the ingredients that go to make up the prepared soil, is necessary. By its use all the coarse particles of soil, and all the larger extraneous substances, are removed, while all the retained parts are adequately mixed.

The ingredients for making a rich and friable soil suitable for use in the more delicate operations of the home garden lie at every gardener's hand. Among such ingredients are garden loam, old compost, leaf-mold (which is to be found by fences and along hedges as well as in the woods), coal ashes, wood ashes, and the little ridges and heaps of sand made on the slopes of the garden by the erosion of rains. Scrapings from the garden paths are good. Sometimes there is available old stable manure that, through long exposure to the weather, has become so disintegrated as to permit its being sifted through a screen.

Proportions Important

THE proportions in which these several ingredients are to be united is important. The garden loam is used as the basis of the compost to be prepared, supplying at least one-half of the total mixture. Leaf-mold, sandy drift, path scrapings and old manure may be added in equal parts to make up the other half. Ashes, if used at all, are employed sparingly.

If it is proposed to add commercial fertilizer to the prepared rich earth, this is withheld until the earth is about to be used; otherwise much of the strength of the fertilizer may be leached away. The kind of commercial fertilizer to be added depends on the crop to be grown and the amount on the kind used. If it is one of the standard complete foods a pint to a bushel of soil is a proper proportion.

Coxcomb Is Decorative In Summer and Winter

A FEW plants of coxcomb (celosia) will decorate the garden and be appreciated after Summer is gone. They make excellent Winter decorations if hung heads downward and allowed to dry thoroughly, when their feather-like flowers in a variety of pastel shades make a delightful and colorful display.

Their massive flowerheads make a vivid appearance in the garden, and may well be used as accents for the border, or used to fill in dull spots. They come in a variety of colors, including yellows, golds, scarlets, crimson, carmine and orange, all exceptionally brilliant.

They are tender annuals and should be planted late in the season, or transplanted from pots grown in the house.

The plumed types like a rich soil in plant food, and may well be nourished by dissolving the plant food in water and moistened this way. The crested types, used for massed effects in beds, like a light soil and less feeding.

Sometimes tree roots work up towards the surface simply because there is water there and none beneath. Heavy watering of lawns once a week rather than light daily sprinkles will prevent this danger and will also be best for the lawn itself.

The best remedy for ailing plants is an application of complete plant food. It can also be used in the rows of the vegetable garden to speed up growth.

Garden Notes for June

By H. WHITEOAK, F.R.H.S.

JUNE is always a busy month in the garden, especially among the vegetables. Carrots, onions, parsnips, lettuce, etc., must be thinned out if we want to have real good specimens. The little plants may be pulled out easier if the work is done after rain, and the young vegetables can be used in the kitchen.

You may now plant out tomatoes, vegetable marrows, cucumbers and squash. It is just as well to protect them if the nights turn cold. A plant pot may be used to cover them.

Between the rows of early potatoes plant Brussels sprouts, brocolli, savoys, etc. Lacking space between the potatoes, they should be set in ground specially prepared for them. Make more sowing of French and runner beans. Provide sticks for the tall-growing varieties.

Draw earth just over the necks of the seedling onions after the thinning process. This prevents the onion fly laying its eggs on the tiny bulbs.

Keep the hoe and cultivator going, get rid of the weeds and create a dust mulch to keep in the moisture. All plants do better when the soil is kept stirred around them to the depth of one or two inches.

Make sowing of the turnip-rooted beet at this time.

Glass Clippings for Mulch

DON'T forget that grass clippings make a wonderful mulch for almost any kind of garden crop. Strawy manure can be used for the same purpose. Plants like a cool root run and a mulch supplies this favorable condition.

Should you have no use for your lawn mowings as above, make them into valuable material for digging next Autumn. A compost heap may be made in one corner of the garden where grass and decaying vegetable can be mixed together.

By selecting seed from your early potatoes, you can improve your variety both in quantity and quality. Save clean potatoes from roots giving a good average crop and of equal size.

Celery needs an abundant supply of moisture. No check should occur in the cultivation of this vegetable or the plants go to seed, which is very undesirable. Occasional doses of liquid manure may be given when the plants are well established and the ground is moist. This latter hint applies in all cases when giving liquid manure—let the soil be in a moist condition.

We are still planting out early flowering chrysanthemums and Michaelmas daisies. Michaelmas daisies and chrysanthemums may have the tops pinched out a few days after planting.

You may still plant dahlias and get results. A rich soil and sunny position is best. Complete your bedding out schemes as soon as possible. Water the young plants carefully at first; don't keep them in a wet condition; water them every few days.

A good many of the hardy perennials may be sown now to flower next year: Campanulas, delphiniums, lupin, foxgloves, coreopsis, gaillandias, hollyhocks, etc. Sow also polyanthus, primroses, pyrethrums, wallflowers and forget-me-nots.

Daffodils which have been more than three years in one place should be lifted and stored away in shallow boxes until planting time next Fall. A cool airy shed where they can be kept is best for them.

Lime for Carnations

CARNATIONS like lime, which can be supplied in the form of old lime rubble. To have clean flowers with straight stems it is necessary to supply sticks, which should be done at an early date.

Early flowering shrubs may be pruned after the flowering period is finished. Don't be afraid to thin out the overcrowded branches you get better flowers.

For mildew, dust with flowers of sulphur early in the morning when the dew is on the leaves.

Replant your water lilies if they require it. Now is the time to secure the lily for your new pond.

Annuals sown last month must be thinned out for best results. Give them lots of room to develop.

Flag iris may be divided this month. A soil containing lime, a sunny position, watered-in at the time of transplanting, and very little water the rest of the season.

Cuttings of pinks and nepeta may now be taken.

Leg Bands on Chicks

IF you band your chickens so that their parentage can be traced throughout their lives, you want to examine the bands now and again.

A healthy chicken grows pretty quickly. The band soon becomes tight, and unless loosened or a larger band be fitted, trouble is going to ensue.

A tight band will bite into the leg and cause lameness, and a wound which is always visible in after-life. It's only humane, therefore, not to wait until you see the birds limping about. Have a look at those banded chickens today.

Canadian Birds

ONE of the few birds which frequent cities during the Summer is the nighthawk. Nighthawks are most frequently seen at dusk and early morning, after moths and various other insects in the dim light. They fly in a very distinctive manner, going straight ahead with steady beats, then rising slightly with a quick flutter. At the peak of this flutter, they give their nasal, twanging "pee." The man who first described this species called it "stringed instrument of the evening"—Chordeilis. Some scientific names are quite interesting when broken up in this way.

The nighthawk and whip-poor-will are representatives of a family commonly known as goatsuckers. As these birds frequent open glades to catch their food, at some distant time the idea originated that they were waiting around for a chance to steal milk from the goats. Although this idea has long since been exploded, the group still retains this name.

Have Unusual Characters

GOATSUCKERS have a number of unusual characters. When perched they sit lengthwise on a branch instead of across it. This, with their color, produces a "bump on the log" effect so that they are hard to see.

The nighthawk has a forked tail with a pronounced white band across it. The whip-poor-will has a round tipped tail with white along the edges. The large white spots on the wing of a nighthawk are a second point of identification of the bird in flight.

Goatsuckers have rather large heads for their size and large liquid or misty eyes. These give a gentleness of expression. The very small bill of goatsuckers gives a false impression of the size of the mouth, for the mouth opens back to the eyes and produces a gape which is truly amazing. Indeed, the whip-poor-will's scientific name means "cave-mouth," which is a fine bit of description in one word. This tremendous gape permits the birds to readily capture large moths which are caught and eaten on the wing. Incidentally the flight performance of nighthawks in pursuit of prey is worth the watching. They dive for amazing distances, zooming up again like an airplane.

Waxwings Are Erratic

WAXWINGS are very erratic in their movements. They may be around all Winter or they may not. Almost any time of the year may see them moving about in flocks, but late May and early June seems to be the time they are most in evidence. In color, waxwings are a soft brown, shading into yellow on the abdomen and white under the tail. The wings and tail are slate grey, the latter tipped with a band of yellow. Regardless of sex, age or season, the midribs of certain of wing feathers (and sometimes the tail) are elongated beyond the vane and are flattened and bright red, looking like sealing-wax.

By large lakes, terns are in evidence. These birds, known often as "sea swallows," are swallow-like in form and are very graceful fliers. The common tern is pearl-grey mantled, paler on the abdomen, elsewhere white, with a black cap and red, black-tipped bill. The black tern is grey above and black below. Its flight is the airiest and most graceful of any of our birds.

DON'T PLAY WITH MATCHES OR YOU'LL GET BURNT

"WOW!" cried the little packrat, running to his mother. Oh, oh, oh! I burned my nose. Oh, it hurts."

The mother packrat picked the little fellow up in her arms and sure enough his little nose was blistered. "My goodness," his mother said as she rubbed some lard on the burn, "How did you ever get your nose burned? Your nose, of all places."

As soon as Jerry, that was the baby packrat's name, could stop crying he told his mother all about it. "Well," he said with a little sob, "Tommy Chipmunk and I were playing in that old cabin, down by the stream, you know, the one where I found that nice shiny piece of glass, and I found a very nice stick. It was just a little stick and the end of it was painted blue and red. Tommy wanted the stick, too, so we looked around to see if there was another one, but there wasn't, so we started to quarrel about this one. I got the end that was painted and pulled as hard as I could and Tommy pulled just as hard on the other end. All at once, poof, and flames burst from the stick, and, oh, mamma, you have no idea of how it burned."

Jerry's mother looked very grave and she patted Jerry on the head and hugged him tightly. "My poor, poor little boy! I know how your nose must have hurt, but I am glad that it happened this way and that you did not get hurt any worse than you did. You see the stick you found was a match, men use them to start fires and sometimes they are very careless and leave them lying around their camps. Often these matches are picked up by little mice and packrats and squirrels, who like their bright colors, and taken away to the woods, then sometime when you least expect it, there is a flash and one match bursts into flame and unless you are very lucky, you either get burned or start a forest fire."

"Just supposing," his mother went on, "that you had brought that match home and put it away with the rest of our collection and suppose that one of your little brothers and sisters had happened to find it. Just imagine what would have happened if they had chewed on the match and it had lighted. Why, in all that string and all those rags, it might have burned the forest we live in and many other forests beside. Wouldn't that have been terrible?

"But now that you have learned about matches, I feel that I don't have to worry about you any more in that respect. I am sure that the next time you find a match you will remember your sore nose and leave the match alone. Of course, it isn't really your fault, but the fault of some careless man or woman or child who left the match where you would find it. They knew that it would burn, you didn't.

"Humans are such careless things, they do not stop to think of all the trouble they can cause the little folks in the woods or they would never put us in such danger. When they come to camp in our forest they feed us, then, when they leave, they throw away matches or forget to put their camp fire out and soon we have no home. I am sure that they mean to be kind, but they are just in too much of a hurry and will not take the few minutes necessary to be careful.

"Perhaps you had better nap for a little while, Jerry. I am sure that if you have a sleep your nose will be much better when you wake up," and Jerry's mother tucked the covers around him and kissed him, just as your mother does when she puts you to bed at night.

Strange Visitor on the Hendrik Johanna

The ship was plunging in a heavy sea, when suddenly, after one exceptionally deep dip, the crew found a stranger floundering on deck. It was a four-foot porpoise.

But they soon wished they had not caught it, for it was no ordinary catch, being a royal fish, and the property of the Crown. The Customs officer who saw it on its arrival had to report its capture to the Natural History Museum at Kensington, the Chief Receiver of Wrecks at the Customs House in London, and the sanitary authorities at Gravesend, as well as measuring it, counting its teeth, and making out a report about it!

Young Joseph Haydn

WHO has not heard of Joseph Haydn, the immortal peasant who fought against poverty and loneliness and wrote his name on the roll of fame?

It is just 200 years since little Joseph was carried off, almost as the Joseph of the Bible was sold into captivity. He was overjoyed at first. A merry child, born in a cottage near Vienna, he had a lovely voice and a passion for music. One day there was a stir in the little house where he lived with his father and mother, brothers and sisters. His father, a wheelwright, had a relative who was a choirmaster, and Joseph had shown so much interest in musical instruments that it was decided to invite the relative to come to see him. He came. He heard the boy sing, and was so delighted that he took Joseph back with him. At six years old Joseph Haydn left his father's cottage to begin life in a strange new world.

Hard and bitter years were before him. His relative was anything but a good man, and there were far more blows than halfpence for the sentitive child. Ill-used, under-fed, he found he had exchanged a happy home for a miserable existence; but he had an opportunity for learning about the one thing he loved most of all; and it was through this harsh relative that he later won a place in the choir school at Vienna.

The Showman

THERE was a great secret about Stephen's party. At tea everyone was wondering what the surprise could be and guessing all sorts of things.

Stephen was smiling quietly to himself when there was a loud knock at the door. In came a man with a large box in one hand and what looked like a bundle of planks over his back. "I'm the Punch and Judy man," he said.

Everyone shouted with delight. So that was it!

They got more and more excited when they saw the Punch and Judy stage going up. The boys were allowed to help to fix the planks together, and the girls to unpack the puppets. But Stephen noticed that the man kept looking at his watch.

"What is the matter?" he asked. "Are you expecting someone?"

"It's my assistant," said the man. "He was to come on the bus, and ought to be here by now. The stage and my box quite filled the sidecar of my motor bicycle, so I had to leave him to come on by himself."

"I'll run and ask if the bus has gone by," said Stephen.

When he returned he had a long face.

"The bus went by ten minutes ago," he said, "so your assistant must have missed it. Does it matter?"

"Well, I can do some parts of the show by myself," answered the man, "but some of it needs two people."

"Look here," said the Punch and Judy man suddenly to Stephen. "You look a sensible fellow. Get a chair to stand on, and come into the box with me. You can be my assistant."

Stephen, highly delighted, was soon mounted inside the stage, listening carefully to the Punch and Judy man's instructions. Then the audience settled down to watch.

Stephen handed the puppets to the man, set up the gallows at the right moment, and at one time was allowed to hold Judy on his fingers and thumb, and squeak out a sentence in her funny voice.

He was standing on tiptoe, trying hard to see the faces of the audience through the curtains, when he suddenly slipped, and clutched at the chair back with his free hand, while Judy shot out into the audience and landed on a girl's lap.

Everyone laughed, so the interruption didn't matter, and the whole party was a great success.

Games

Beetle Goes Around

THE players form a circle, facing inward and standing close together, hands clasped behind, right hand in the left. One of the players runs around the outside of the circle with a beetle. Dropping this beetle into the hands of one of the other players, he calls, "Beetle, strike!" and keeps on running, while the player who has been given the beetle chases him, trying to strike him with the beetle as often as possible before he reaches the vacant place. Player No. 2 then runs around and passes the beetle, when he, in turn, is chased; and so on.

Beetles should be made of soft cloth, about twelve inches long and four in diameter, and filled with cotton.

Blind Total

ON a piece of paper write any simple total, say thirty-five, and place it out of sight, inside a book for instance.

Take another piece of paper and go round to five or six members of the company and ask each one to write down a single number.

When sufficient numbers have been thus obtained, ask another member of the company to total them up, and the correct answer will be found on the slip of paper previously concealed.

At this point you ask the last person for his initials and under cover of writing them down you merely add the number—six—required to complete the necessary total.

How can you change apples into other fruit?—Put two together and make a pair (pear).

King Koroki Has a New Palace

AMONG the most interesting of the native races of the British Empire are the brown-skinned Maoris who make up about 75,000 of New Zealand's population.

On the banks of the beautiful Waikato River (the Thames of New Zealand) is the new dwelling of the Maori king, officially opened at a great gathering of Maoris and British people from all over the Dominion.

Leader of the Maoris

THE Maori king is a young man. His name is Koroki, and the little borough of Ngarfuawahia on the the Waikato River, eighty miles south of Auckland, is his capital. King Koroki is the acknowledged leader of the Maoris of New Zealand, but, like so many kings of modern times, he takes no direct part in ruling the country. The Maoris elect four members out of the eighty members of the New Zealand Parliament to help in making the laws for white and brown citizens.

King Koroki's new palace (wharepuni) is named Turongo, after one of his famous ancestors. It is a fitting place for one who can do much to lead his race to new honor in modern times, when their future lies in their own hands. The wooden walls of the buildings are ornamented with wonderful carvings, the work of skilful Maori artists. It is indeed a treasure house of Maori art, which will be alike an inspiration to the younger generation of Maoris and an object of admiration for the British.

Governor's Arrival

TO the river landing of the Maori King's capital there came the other day Viscount Galway, Governor-General of New Zealand, traveling in a huge canoe paddled by Maori men. This canoe is sixty-eight feet long and was hollowed out of a giant forest tree. Seventy years ago, when there was warfare between the British and the Maoris, this very canoe was smashed by British soldiers so that it could not be used in raids by hostile natives, but in recent times its stout timbers have been repaired, and now King George's representative in New Zealand has traveled in it, escorted by the descendants of the Maoris who fought against the British settlers.

The official opening of King Koroki's palace was a notable event. The speech of the Governor-General was responded to by the orators of the Maoris, scores of Maori men in native costumes danced the war dance of their race, and Maori women danced as they sang the folk songs handed down from age to age before the Maoris had a written language.

The Crab Ship

A NEW motor ferry which is rather like a crab, for it can move forwards, backwards, sideways, or turn as on a pivot, has taken the place of a worn-out paddle steamer on the service between Lymington and the Isle of Wight.

She is called the Lymington and is the first vessel of the kind to be seen in British waters. She has no rudders, but is steered by twin sets of propellers (which are controlled from the bridge). These are connected by gearing with Diesel engines and enable the ship to move in any desired direction. As the Lymington River is very narrow, winding, and shallow, it is necessary to have a boat such as this.

The Kingdom of King Zog

NO country in Europe could show such a sight as Tirana, the capital of Albania, at the wedding of King Zog to his bride, Countess Geraldine Apponyi.

It might be compared to a page of history spread out, with all the characters gaily painted in the fashions of a thousand yesterdays, and in the dresses of half a dozen different races. The royal marriage sets the seal on Albania as a kingdom. For centuries it was a gathering-place of the tribes.

Albania has now become a country of the all-embracing West, with a seat at the League of Nations. But almost till twenty years ago it was the farthest outpost in the Mediterranean of the Middle East, where people who were there before Rome was built had fought to keep their footing against invaders from the North.

They kept it long and well, and their stone forts and palaces in the hills, like those the Greeks built at Mycenae, are there still to tell the tale. It was ended by Greek colonist and Illyrian invader absorbing one another. The Albanians today are the descendants of the union.

Independent Land

BUT that brief statement gives a very imperfect picture of the races and religions mingling in the rugged Highlands and the less inclement Lowlands of this independent land. Its Highlands are like those of Scotland on a larger scale, and not so long ago we might have said that its chieftains and clansmen were as irrepressible as the Scottish Highlanders in the eighteenth century, before General Wade drove his military roads through their glens.

These descendants of Celts and Illyrians have survived the successive invasion and rule of Romans, Bulgars, Serbs, and Turks, and are Albanians still. No conqueror has succeeded in absorbing them. Early in their history they formed two groups under separate princes, and these can still be traced in the Ghegs of the north and the Tosks of the south. The Ghegs, living in a far more rugged region, still rule themselves by ancient laws and customs handed down by elders of the tribe.

The Great War swept over the mountains and left a starving peasantry, instead of a well-to-do primitive people; but now the burnt villages have been rebuilt, flocks are again in the rich mountain pastures, and the tribesmen are once more coming into the market-place at Scutari to sell their livestock, cheese and poultry.

The townsman throughout Albania leads a very different life from the mountain farmer. He is a skilled craftsman; a weaver, and a worker in gold and silver wire; and his craft is reflected in the splendid dress every Albanian delights to wear on ceremonial occasions.

Religions Mingle

WHAT first strikes a visitor to Albania is the mingling of Christians and Moslems. Church and mosque stand side by side. The Turks conquered Albania five centuries ago, and though the Albanians for years besought the help of Christian Europe, none came, so that Islam had spread over the country by the end of the eighteenth century. King Zog, who before he was proclaimed king ten years ago was Ahmed Bey Zogu, hereditary chieftain of the Mati clan, is a Moslem, and more than 20,000 Moslems met to attend his wedding at Tirana recently.

The Moslems outnumber the Christians by more than two to one, but the Albanians put race before religion, and both religions united to struggle against the Turks for the independence that at last they won. It has always been so among them.

They were long refused schools, sometimes imprisoned for printing books in their own language, or for teaching it; but the indomitable Albanian has survived it all, and today his country, in some ways the oldest, has now become the youngest kingdom in Europe. Here indeed East and West have met.

Sea Voyage for Sheep

LIKE Little Bo-Peep of the nursery rhyme, little New Zealand, smallest of the Empire's Dominions, is continually losing her sheep. The difference is that New Zealand knows where to find them.

For instance, eight purebred sheep selected from famous sheep stations in the South Island of New Zealand were recently sent on a long sea voyage to Kenya, where they were bought on behalf of a Kenya pastoralist whose property is almost at the equator but 9,000 feet above sea level, so that sheep and cattle thrive there as well as they do in the temperate zones of the world.

They were shipped from Lyttleton, the port of the Canterbury Province of New Zealand, famous for its prime lamb. One ship took them to Melbourne, Australia, where they were placed on board a ship bound for Durban, South Africa. Then came a voyage northwards in another ship to Mombasa, after which they were taken on the final stage of their journey to the Highlands of Kenya.

From English Pastures

NEW ZEALAND'S sheep are among the best in the world, and it is no wonder that orders come from distant countries for the pick of the flock. The mild climate of New Zealand enables sheep to graze on hillside pastures all the year round, so that they grow big and strong, with first-class fleeces.

Of course the thirty-one million sheep in New Zealand today are the descendants of small flocks taken by the pioneer settlers who made their homes there less than a hundred years ago. Most of the first sheep came from the neighboring settlements in Australia, but New Zealand sheepfarmers have brought some of the best sheep from English pastures. Two very prominent breeds of sheep in New Zealand are the Romney Marsh and Southdown breeds, which have sprung from the flocks of the southeast corner of England.

Thousands of New Zealand's best sheep have been shipped to South American countries, which supply so much meat for the markets of the United Kingdom. Russia has also bought New Zealand sheep to help in improving the flocks on Russian pastures.

The Royal Daffodil

THE heroic Royal Daffodil has come to the end of her long, exciting career. She is the ferry steamer which played such a gallant part on St. George's Day twenty years ago, for she and her sister ship Iris pushed the Vindictive against the Mole at Zeebrugge. Her task done, she staggered home with survivors. For many years she was a ferry boat on the Mersey, and then a pleasure steamer on the Thames, and now her usefulness is over and she is to be broken up.

What is the difference between a schoolboy studying and a farmer watching his cattle?—One is stocking his mind and the other is minding his stock.

The Silver Jubilee of a Silver Lining

THE Australian Inland Mission, which has been such a wonderful help to courageous pioneers, has been celebrating its silver jubilee. It is good that it should have reached its silver jubilee, for it has been a silver lining in the clouds to many lonely and troubled folk.

Few people realize the loneliness endured by settlers in Australia, one of the driest countries in he world. The women especially have a very hard time, for their lives are made up of continual hardships. Often, owing to drought, they are forced to abandon their homes, and sometimes a woman may not see another woman for a year or two.

Heroic Mrs. Bonning, who runs Helen Springs Mission, is an example of the true pioneering spirit, for recently, with her daughter and the black boys who help her to manage her station, she drove 1,000 head of cattle 500 miles to the nearest railway. The fact that in the whole of this region, which is known as the Inland, not counting Darwin and Alice Springs, there are no more than a hundred women, shows how desperately lonely their lives must be.

It is to Flynn of the Inland that most of the credit for the splendid work done by the Inland Mission must be given, for it was he who, traveling by camel, first saw the plight of the scattered inhabitants of this vast territory of three million square miles and decided that something would have to be done about it. His unceasing work has resulted in there being today five flying doctor services, twelve nursing homes, many wireless transmitters, and padres, who, in their modern cars, each patrol about a quarter of a million miles.

Exhibition Week Is Strenuous for King and Queen

By GLANVILLE CAREW

LONDON (BUP).—"The King and Queen, with ladies and gentlemen in attendance, arrived in Glasgow this morning. Behind that bald statement published in The Court Circular issued from Buckingham Palace on the day the King and Queen arrived in Glasgow to open the Empire Exhibition lies the fact that Their Majesties had begun one of the most strenuous weeks of activity since the Coronation.

How strenuous was this activity can be told in the form of a diary for the week. Certainly the King and Queen bore a public burden during this week as great as any of the dictators who love to strut before their people, and with far less pomp and circumstance.

Before their arrival in Glasgow a considerable amount of work had to be done in connection with the preparation of the programme. The King worked actively on this.

THE FIRST FUNCTION

Monday—A special night train took them to Glasgow and on their arrival the first function of the King was to attend to the special papers of State which are always sent on to him wherever he goes outside of London.

Tuesday—His Majesty's working day normally begins at 9:30 a.m., and on this particular occasion he was obliged to rise even earlier than usual in order to receive his secretaries and consider the State matters placed before him. A little later began the ceremonies for opening the Exhibition. The King and Queen drove into the vast Ibrox Stadium in an Ascot landau to the cheers of the assembled 150,000 Scots. There the scene resembled something of Ascot and something of the Royal Tournament. After his official welcome the King had to stand before the huge multitude and render the speech which immediately preceded the opening of the exhibition for Their Majesties' tour of the numerous pavilions.

This was very tiring. Together the King and Queen walked through the various Dominion pavilions while later the Queen separately toured one of the two palaces of industry, the Burma Pavilion, and the Women of Empire Pavilion. With his wife carrying out her part of the programme the King meanwhile inspected the Pavilion of West Africa, Southern Rhodesia, the smaller colonies, and the main Palace of Industry.

WALK OF MILES

It must have been several miles that the King and Queen walked in this tour of inspection.

Then came a brief respite when Their Majesties sat down to luncheon, but the only occasion when they really escaped from the crowds was after luncheon when they ascended by lift to the top of the Tower of Empire, from which they were able to command a splendid view of the whole exhibition and the surrounding countryside.

Another exacting tour came for Their Majesties in the afternoon when they proceeded to an inspection of the Scottish Industrial Estate at Hillington near Bellahouston Park, the site of the exhibition.

Again on foot the King and Queen carried out the tour. They visited the homes of some of the former unemployed families who have been drafted to this estate from the most heavily distressed areas. They spent several hours on the estate and it was not until evening that they left.

Wednesday—Once more Their Majesties began a day of considerable activity, and in the words of The Court Circular for this day, "The King and Queen, with ladies and gentlemen in attendance, arrived at Rutherglen this morning from Drumclog and were received by the Vice-Lieutenant of Lanarkshire." This was to indicate that the King and Queen were about to begin a tour of the industrial, but still distressed area of Lanarkshire.

THE NIGHT IN TRAIN

The day began with a visit to a steel works, where a full complement of 1,200 men have found continuous employment during the last four years. This is a remarkable result in an area where twenty per cent of the population is returned as unemployed.

The tremendous heat which always pervades the atmosphere of steel works is hardly one in which to spend a pleasant morning, and in this case the King and Queen spent quite some time there.

With their conclusion of the inspection of the steel works Their Majesties, after luncheon, spent the rest of the day seeing places and institutions intended to mitigate the consequences of unemployment in the staple industries of the region.

Most of the tour was made on foot, and particularly tiring it was. For the roads in this area have a surface of gravel and to walk for some time over its difficult surface must have caused acute discomfort to the feet.

In the evening the King and Queen concluded their tour and drove to the station and reentered the Royal train shortly after six o'clock.

ARRIVE AT EUSTON

Thursday—At about 8 a.m. the train drew in at Euston, the King having attended to much routine work on the way home.

In the words of The Court Circular for this day, "The King and Queen, with ladies and gentlemen in attendance, arrived at the Palace this morning on the completion of Their Majesties' tour of Scotland."

With the consideration of the State's papers concluded and the reports of the secretaries received, His Majesty received Herr Herbert von Dirksen in audience and was presented by him with the letters of recall of his predecessor and his own letters of credence as Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary from the Republic of Germany to the Court of St. James. The Court Circular adds:

"Monsieur Nikola Momtchiloff (who presented the letters of recall of his predecessor and his own letters of credence as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the Kingdom of Bulgaria) and Senor Patino (who presented the letters of recall of his predecessor and his own letters of credence as Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary from the Republic of Bolivia) were received in audience by the King.

"The Viscount Halifax (Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs), who had an audience of His Majesty, was present, and the gentlemen of the household in waiting were in attendance.

OTHER APPOINTMENTS

"Major Sir Herbert Young (who kissed hands upon his appointment as Governer and Commander-in-Chief of Trinidad and Tobago) and Mr. John A. Maybin (who kissed hands upon his appointment as Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Northern Rhodesia) were also received by the King.

And while the Queen spent the afternoon watching a display of Lancashire fabrics, the King remained in the Palace and engaged upon the affairs of State. Except for the interval for dinner the King worked continuously until well into the evening.

Friday—The Court Circular for this day reads:

"The King held a council this morning at 10:30 o'clock. There were present: The Viscount Hailsham (Lord President), Brigadier-General the Lord Gowrie, V.C., (Governor-General of the Commonwealth of Australia), the Right Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, M.P., (Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs), and the Right Hon. Sir Horace Rumbold, Bt.

"The Viscount Hailsham had an audience of the King previous to the Council and the Right Hon. Malcolm MacDonald, M.P., had an audience of the King after the Council.

"The Right Hon. Earle Page (Minister for Commerce, and Deputy Prime Minister, Commonwealth of Australia) had an audience of the King, when His Majesty conferred upon him the honor of Knighthood and invested him with the Insignia of a Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George."

GUARDS' CENTENARY

In the afternoon the King, as Colonel-in-Chief, joined with officers and men of the Brigade of Guards in commemorating the centenary of the opening of the Royal Military Chapel, Wellington Barracks, at the service held there.

The King was accompanied by the Queen, and also present at the service were Queen Mary, the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, and Princess Royal.

Later in the afternoon the Queen received the German Ambassador, Madame de Blanck, the wife of the Cuban Minister, the Bulgarian Minister and Madame Momtchiloff, and the Bolivian Minister and Madame Patino.

"Her Majesty," reads The Court Circular, "with the Princess Elizabeth and the Princess Margaret, attended by the Lady Helen Graham and Captain Richard Streatfield, was present at the National Festival of the School's Musical Festivals of England this afternoon at the Royal Albert Hall."

DAYS OF REST

That evening the King and Queen, with the two Princesses left the Palace for the Royal Lodge, Windsor Great Park, where they usually spend the week-end. Saturday and Sunday, as far as the business of State will permit, are enjoyed as days of rest by Their Majesties. State matters, for the King at least, are often urgent enough to prevent his enjoying Saturday as a rest day. Specially in the last few months has this been so. Disturbed world relations have been the cause.

Monday—This day was one of importance and much activity by the King. He inspected the Royal Air Force stations in the southern area of the country, including Northolt, Harwell, Berkshire, Uphavon, Wiltshire, and the new costal reconnaissance station on Thorney Island, near Portsmouth. On this tour the King saw secrets of Britain's air strength that foreign powers would pay thousands of pounds to know. In all he flew more than two hundred miles, and when he landed at Uphavon, one of the earliest stations of the Old Royal Flying Corps, he remarked:

Not only did the King see the new fast fighters and bombers, but he also learned from senior officers who attended him the details of the expanded organizations and the machinery they depend upon for efficient operation.

It was not until late evening that the King was able to return to the Palace for dinner with the Queen and other members of the Royal Family.

BEARING THE STRAIN

And such was the extent of the activity of the King during this particularly strenuous week.

At the time of the Coronation fears were expressed that the health of the King might weaken before the strain of the duties of Kingship, but his health has remained very good since that time, and has remained unaffected by the work during the week just recounted.

METAL FAMINE IS PREDICTED

British Scientists Say Some of Commonest Being Rapidly Exhausted

LONDON (BUP).—A world metal famine is being predicted by British scientists.

Some of the commonest metals known today are being rapidly exhausted, they declare. In the past thirty years, the world has used up more of its mineral resources than in all its previous history, right back to the Stone Age.

The real shortage is in the non-ferrous metals, it is stated. Workable deposits of zinc and lead are likely to be exhausted in the comparatively near future. Lead, though it is now used at the rate of about 1,000,000 tons a year, may soon become a rare metal, and copper and tin will disappear long before all the iron in the world is used up.

BAR TO CONQUEST

Neither Japan nor China, nor any other Asiatic nation will ever conquer the rest of the world because they have not the metals to do it with, the scientists declare.

Many of the most important minerals, like coal, iron and copper, are almost exclusively concentrated in Western Europe and North America. Here is to found ninety per cent of the coal, and ninety-eight per cent of the iron ore.

Already the process of substitution has begun. Chiefly because of its lightness, more and more is being done with aluminium—the world's commonest metal—though it has only been in widespread use during recent years.

ALUMINIUM ALLOYS

Scientists are now investigating the possibility of building battleships of aluminum alloys, which have already been used successfully for small ships.

The plastics industry, which has grown from nothing since the war, is rapidly developing synthetic resin as a substitute for metals. Synthetic resin may take the place of lead for electric cables long before lead starts to become a rare metal. Germany is already using it for water pipes.

WEAR MORE WOOL

JOHANNESBURG (BUP).—South Africa has joined Australia and New Zealand in a world-wide publicity campaign to promote greater use of wool. The slogan is "wear more wool."

Sheep farming is South Africa's second most important industry. The value of wool exports last year was $65,000,000.

Glasgow Exhibition Given High Praise by Writer From Berlin

Says Display Avenges Poor Show Made at Paris—Gives the Impression of Being Present at Informal Reception of Empire

BERLIN (BUP).—The Empire Exhibition in Glasgow is praised by the special correspondent of The Berliner Tageblatt, Dr. Edgar Gerwin. "Britain's poor show at the Paris International Exhibition has been avenged," he writes. "This proves once again that Britain is more concerned about Empire opinion than "mere" world opinion.

"The Glasgow Exhibition has a double advantage over that in Paris. Firstly it was ready on the opening day, and secondly, it has been built with an eye to architectural effect.

"In spite of the architecture, however, it was not very impressive at first. The individual one-storied buildings lack Roman majesty. But against this the Exhibition gives one an impression of unceremonious friendliness. You don't feel that you are on a visit but at home, as though you were at an informal reception by the Empire at which things go very naturally without a frock coat and introductions.

"Can you imagine anything more natural than to see Scots pathfinder girls in their hiking dress, washing up amid scenery which has been reproduced true to nature? Or the old Scots weaver out of a remote corner of the Highlands, turning her wheel and not afraid to sound her no longer tuneful voice in songs of the homeland even before the Queen with her Royal retinue?

MORE AT HOME

"Even England feels more at home in Glasgow than in Paris. The British Government Pavilion—and British includes Scots, Irish and Welsh, many of them against their will—is English in the best sense of the word.

"It would be a shame if this building, which, with the tower deserves to be called architectural art, were to disappear when the Exhibition closes."

Television Now Conquers Space

LONDON (BUP).—Television's greatest problem, long distance transmission, has been conquered by British television engineers, it is claimed.

In a report issued in 1935 the television committee stated that reception would be confined to twenty-five miles of the transmitter and that hills would interfere.

Tests made in the past few weeks, however, show that perfect reception can be had at a distance of over 110 miles, with no distortion or interference from hills as high as 1,000 feet, it is stated.

EATS HIS HAT

The goal was scored and so he ate his hat.

May Have to Spend Life Aboard Ship

LONDON (BUP).—On board the British liner Salamaua is a man who may be forced to spend the rest of his life at sea.

Two years ago he boarded ship as a stowaway and there he has stayed because thirty countries have refused to admit him.

Leo, as his fellow shipmates have christened him, is deaf and dumb, and is believed to be French, but is unable to produce any definite proof of his nationality or birthplace.

Recently the captain made Leo an assistant steward on salary.

BILLION COINS WITHDRAWN

LONDON (BUP).— The task of withdrawing all silver coins struck before 1920—about 1,000,000,000—and replacing them with coins containing 50 per cent silver instead of 92½ per cent has just been completed by the Royal Mint. The task took eighteen years.

Twenty-Day Journey Circling the World Soon the Schedule

Possibility Foreshadowed by Plans of Imperial Airways and Their Associated Companies—Important First Move Next Month

LONDON (BUP).—Travelers may soon be able to fly round the world by normal air services in twenty days. The possibility is foreshadowed in plans now being perfected by Imperial Airways and their associated companies throughout the Empire. The plans are the most ambitious air developments yet devised by any nation and provide for an all-red girdle round the earth.

The first important move will be made within the next month or so when Mercury, upper unit of the flying-boat Mata, will start the regular trans-Atlantic service between Foynes, Eire, and Botwood, Newfoundland.

In the other direction, new type flying-boats will leave Southampton and blaze an Empire trail across Egypt, Palestine, Irak, Arabia, India, Burma and Malaya to Australia.

NEW TASMAN ROUTE

The new Tasman route will then be established, flying-boats making the 1,100-mile sea crossing between Brisbane and Auckland, New Zealand.

From Auckland flying history will be made when the giant boats take off on a new route across the Pacific Ocean to San Francisco. From there the route will extend to Vancouver. Here, land planes will wait for mails and passengers and be flown by trans-Canada machines to Montreal, where they will link up with the Atlantic services.

By August eight of the secret 25-ton flying-boats will be delivered for a series of test flights before they are put into regular service in the "round the world" programme. They will have new-type tanks, improved wireless equipment and many other up-to-date devices.

CHILDREN IN CARD INDEX

Wife of American Ambassador Systematic in Her Maternal Duties

LONDON (BUP).—Mrs. Joseph Kennedy, wife of the American Ambassador to Great Britain, uses a card index to aid her in remembering the exact history of all her nine children, The Sunday Express reports.

The newspaper declares that its representative was told by Mrs. Kennedy that each of her children has a card on which all details regarding the health, weight, height and the diseases and ailments they have suffered from are recorded.

When Jack Kennedy celebrates his twenty-first birthday he will be able to smoke and drink for the first time—if he wants to. All the Kennedy children have forsworn these indulgences until coming of age, when they receive a reward for their abstinence.

The Kennedy children do not go to boarding schools until they are about 14. So that they may benefit by a family life Mrs. Kennedy lunches with them almost every day. The elder ones dine with their parents each night "so that they can hear their father talk."

Shark Hunts As Sideshow Of Exhibition

Special motor-coach tours have been arranged to the sharking grounds off Carradale, Argyllshire, the journey from the Exhibition taking four hours.

ICE-BOX CURES INVALID WOMAN

Unconscious for Forty-Two Days She Awakens With Renewed Youth

LONDON (BUP). — The most terrifying rejuvenation experiment ever attempted in the history of medicine, consisting of keeping the patient in an ice-box for weeks, has proved successful, The Sunday Pictorial reports.

The newspaper tells the strange story of Anna Broogg, who, it is claimed, emerged from an ice-box where she had spent forty-two days at below zero temperature looking and feeling twenty years younger.

The woman, the newspaper declares, a physical wreck who had lost at the age of thirty all her youth and strength and felt she had nothing to lose, offered herself as a human guinea pig to Prof. De Lampl, who had heretofore only tried his serum and refrigeration treatment on animals.

After fasting for forty-eight hours, Miss Broogg was given a general anaesthetic, several injections of the serum, and placed in a glass refrigerator. Gradually the temperature was reduced to zero.

For forty-two days she lay like a corpse in her glass "coffin," and then on the forty-third day the temperature inside was raised and she was taken from the ice-box and placed in a normal bed, where, it is claimed, she awakened with every sign of renewed youth, strength and fertility.

TRYING TO SAVE ANTELOPE HERD

Appeal Made to Natal Authorities For Protection of Few Remaining Red Hartebeest

DURBAN—A movement is on foot to preserve for all time a small herd of red hartebeest antelope which lives on a Natal farm. It is the only remaining herd of this species in the world, and it would not exist today but for the efforts of the farmer in protecting it from hunters. There are only seventy animals in the herd.

The farmer, Mr J. Moe, of New Hanover, is now too old to continue his task of protecting them and has appealed to the Natal authorities to carry on. The farm will probably be purchased by the Government and proclaimed a national reserve, as has been done in parts of Zululand, where the equally rare white rhino are found.
